10. Clearing and Settlement Process

← Previous Chapters Next →

10.1 – Market structure

The topic of clearing and settlement is super important to understand as it gives you a sense of the movement of money and funds between your account and, let's just say, the stock market. For instance, when you buy a stock, say 100 shares of Marico, you need to clearly understand how long it takes for the broker to remit these 100 Marico shares to your Demat account. We can extend this to stock selling as well.

The lack of understanding of the clearing and settlement process could leave a void and leave you with many unanswered questions related to the market structure. Hence, for this reason, we will explore what happens behind the scenes from when you buy a stock to when it hits your DEMAT account.

We will keep this discussion practical with a clear emphasis on what you need to know about clearing and settlement.

10.2 – What happens when you buy a stock?

Day 1 – The trade (T Day), Monday

Assume on a Monday, you buy 100 shares of Reliance Industries at Rs.1,000/- per share. The total buy value is Rs.1,00,000/- (100 * 1000). The day you make the transaction is the trade date; brokers refer to this as the ‘T Day.’ The assumption is that you intend to hold Reliance Industries in your Demat account for a few days or maybe years, and it is not an intraday trade.

When you place an order to buy, the broker quickly validates if you have the necessary funds. In this example, the order will go through only if you have Rs.1,00,000/- in your trading account; it will be rejected otherwise. Assuming the trade is executed through Zerodha, the applicable charges are –

Sl No	Chargeable Item	Applicable Charges	Amount
01	Brokerage	Zero for Equity Delivery. For intraday, charges are 0.03% or Rs.20/- whichever is lower, per executed order	Zero
02	Security Transaction Charges(STT)	0.1% of the turnover	100/-
03	Exchange transaction Charges	0.00345% of the turnover	3.45/-
04	GST	18% of Brokerage + Transaction charges + SEBI charges	0.62/-
07	SEBI Charges	Rs.10 per crore of transaction	0.12/-
Total			104.19/-

Additionally, Rs.15/- towards stamp duty is applicable. Stamp duty is charged at 0.015% on the buy side. Hence the total applicable charges are Rs.119.19. Note that these rates are subject to change; you can visit Zerodha's Brokerage calculator to figure out the exact applicable rate when you wish to carry out a transaction.

So an amount of Rs.1,00,000 plus 119.19 totaling Rs.1,00,119.19/- is required to carry out this particular transaction. Remember, the money is blocked in your account when you place a trade, but the stock is yet to hit your DEMAT account.

Also, on the T day, the broker generates a ‘contract note’ and emails you the copy to your registered email id. A contract note is like a bill detailing all your daily transactions. You can save the contract note for future reference. A contract note gives you a break up of all daily transactions and the trade reference number. It also shows the breakup of charges charged by the broker.

Day 2 – Trade Day + 1 (T+1 day, Tuesday)

Starting January 2023, India became the first country to implement a T+1 settlement for all the scrips listed on the stock exchanges. Earlier when you used to buy the shares, these would be delivered to your demat account on T+2 day. For example, if you bought shares on Monday, these will be credited to your demat account only on Wednesday. With T+1 settlement, if you buy shares on Monday, they will be credited to your demat account on Tuesday, the next day itself.

So on Day 2, also called T+1, the settlement is due to the exchange. Assuming the purchaser and seller are trading via two different brokers, the funds are debited from the buyer's broker's pool account by the clearing corporation and credited to the selling broker's pool account. Also, on T+1 day, the shares will reflect in the purchaser's DEMAT account, indicating that you own 100 shares of Reliance.

10.3 – What happens when you sell a stock?

The day you sell the stocks is again referred to as the 'T Day'. The stock gets blocked when you sell the stock from your DEMAT account, and by the end of the day, the stocks are 'earmarked' for settlement. Please refer to the next section to learn more about earmarking.

Before the T+1 day, the earmarked shares are delivered to the depository. On settlement day, the blocked shares are debited from your demat account and moved to the clearing corporation for payin. Against the debit of such shares, you'd have received a credit for the sale after deducting all charges. You may be interested to note that you will receive 80% of the funds on T-Day and the remaining 20% on T+1. In other words, the seller will be settled fully on a T+1 basis, just like how the buyer is settled.

What transpires between T day and T+1 is a complex settlement process involving the stockbroker, clearing corporation, depository, and the stock exchange. Each entity uploads and receives multiple files to ensure the transaction goes smoothly. As far as you are concerned, you need to remember that equity transactions are settled on a T+1 basis, meaning, if you are a buyer, you will get the shares on T+1, and if you are a seller, the funds are credited on a T+1 basis.

10.4 – What is earmarking?

Earlier, for the settlement of a sell trade, the broker would be required to debit shares from a selling client, hold the securities in the broker's pool account, and transfer the securities to the clearing corporation (CC) on T+2. Upon transfer, the client would receive a credit of funds against the sale, and the transaction would have been said to be settled. It was usual practice for brokers to debit shares on T day or T+1 day and transfer it to CC on T+2 (since the settlement was on T+2).

From the time the shares were debited until they were settled, the client shares lie in the broker's pool account, possibly allowing a broker to misuse these securities. SEBI identified this as a potential risk and introduced "earmarking" for settlement. In this new earmarking system, shares are no longer debited from the client's account; they are only earmarked for settlement. Think of earmarking as a temporary hold on the securities towards an upcoming settlement for the sale transaction initiated by the client.

On settlement day, the shares are debited from the investor's account and credited to the clearing corporation. This new process eliminates the need for brokers to hold client shares in their pool account, thereby eliminating the risk that comes along. The new earmarking process has been made mandatory from November 2022.

Key takeaways from this chapter

1. The day you make a transaction, the trade date is referred to as the 'T Day.'
2. The broker must issue you a contract note for all transactions by the end of T day.
3. When you buy a share, the same will be reflected in your DEMAT account by the end of T+1 day.
4. All equity/stock settlements in India happen on a T+1 basis.
5. When you sell shares, the shares are blocked immediately, and the sale proceeds are credited again on T+1 day.
6. Earmarking of shares was introduced to ensure the securities don't move out of the client's demat account to the broker's pool account.

Hi, I sold full quantity of a particular the holding stock and the order is showing completed under executed tab. where as it is still showing under position tab and when I select the same , I could see ADD and EXIT options. What is the significance of same. Do I again need to exit from here. What happens if I don't exit from here.

The add and exit option is to give the traders an option to quickly add and exit positions. For example, if you have 100 shares of Biocon, you can add another 50 quickly or exit 25 from the 100 you hold.

Think of it as a quick way to manage your position. If you have exited fully, you don't have to worry about it.

In the positions window (after i sold my holdings on CNC), what will happen if i add again the same quantity of shares i sold ? will it be treated as intraday sale and Purchase ? If it is treated as intraday transaction, then my demat holdings should remain intact with the same average purchased price. Correct me if my understanding is wrong. Thanks in advance

Hi I have held 20 shares of x company at price of 1215.
Sold those 20 shares for 1250. On the same day I bought another 20 shares of same x company at 1289.
So according to FIFO the executed order should be for 1215 priced shares but instead here Zerodha credited back my 20 shares of price 1215 and sold shares bought on same day with 1289. Due to this it shows me a loss. why did it happen ?

Reply

Date Order Units Price
19/08/25 Buy 20 1215.45
21/08/25 Sell 20 1250
21/08/25 Buy 20 1289.50
21/08/25 Buy 20 1238

Based on the above transcript and FIFO logic my shares of 1215.45 should be sold at 1250 and I should have made some profit.

But according to Zerodha My shares of 1289.50 were sold with buy of 1289.50 and sell value of 1250 and I am in loss. Also instead the shares with 1215 were credited back to my account with the other 20 shares priced at 1238 rwith now at total of 40 shares at 1226.72. Why did it not follow FIFO since my oldest shares were supposed to be sold no matter I buy the shares with same quantity or price @zerodha

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:

You first need to match intraday trades, remove them as they're speculative in nature and then do FIFO for capital gains.

I had same scenario with JK PAPER, like in your case you bought again, for me to buy i have to sell my holdings by entering tpin, after getting funds i bought again, question is how is the contract being wave off, how can intraday pairing considered without selling the holdings for funds to avail?

I think its flaw in the system

I am definitely going to raise this issue with sebi

Appreciate if you also raise from your end.

In fact this is how it should take place based on FIFO by pairing

19/08/25 Buy 20 1215.45

21/08/25 Sell 20 1250 — this pair will result to contract

As there is no sell remaining will be delivery

21/08/25 Buy 20 1289.50

21/08/25 Buy 20 1238

With the present logic while trading human intervention is required and we have to keep note of the BUY & SELL

Reply

-  Centireo says:
June 22, 2026 at 12:23 am

Indian stock exchanges (NSE and BSE) and tax laws do not look at the chronological order of trades during the day. Instead, they use an End-of-Day (EOD) Netting system that completely rewrites the timeline at 3:30 PM. So your first two trades in the 21st are considered intraday trades.

Hi, if I have bought 5 stocks of XYZ at 100 rs a year and a half ago, and then I buy 2 more shares of the same company today at let's say at 85 rs. Now, after a month, I decide to sell 2 shares. Question 1:

which shares out of these 7 shares will be sold first? Question 2: How will we determine whether the profits that I booked will come under long term gain or short term gain?

Reply

-  Ayush says:
July 23, 2025 at 1:30 pm

Answer 1 – As far as I know India follows the FIFO method(i.e. First In First Out)
So, when you decided to sell 2 shares after buying 7 (5 old @100 and 2 recent @85), the 2 share you sell will be sold from those 5 old share.

Answer 2 – So based on your sold shares this will come under long term gain cause you hold them for more than 12 months.

//Long term capital gain – Holding period is more than 12 months.

//Short term capital gain – Holding period is less than equal to 12 months.

When intraday sell shares are converted the profit of purchased price and sell price is not added to profit. With this jungling losing good amount so it is better not convert intraday sell shares with available equity when you the share price is higher than purchase price.

I have been holding 100 shares of XYZ and on certain T day I buy 20 shares more at lower price. On T+1 day, the avg buy price has been adjusted. Now if I sell 20 shares on T+1 day, which stocks get sold? The ones I have been holding since long or the 20 shares I bought the previous day?

Reply

o Karthik Rangappa says:

It works on a first in first out basis (FIFO). So the one you've been holding for long will get sold first.

October 8, 2024 at 4:11 pm

If we sell an equity on T+1 day, since buy orders are already sent to the exchange on T day-end, it is out of broker's control and cannot be treated as intraday. Also, equities don't hit demat on T+1 day and we sell equity that we don't yet own resulting in shorting.

I found one of these points while going through the comments of this particular post.

Is this point still relevant, because the equities will hit put demat account on at the end of T+1 day and thus there would be no shorting?

A follow up, like the but orders are sent to the exchange at the end of the T day, similarly the sell orders are also sent to the exchange at the end of the T day?

Reply

o Karthik Rangappa says:

October 9, 2024 at 1:42 pm

Yes, the point is that these trades still carry the BTST risk. Yes, all orders are sent to the exchange.

I have some doubts to clarify about the delivery margin after sale.

1) To my understanding, when a sale is executed, zerodha holds 20 OR 25% as delivery margin(DM)?

2) If zerodha holds Rs 2500 (25%) as DM of a Rs 10000 sale, WHY does my available cash(AC) and available margin(AM) show the full Rs 10000, should it not display Rs 7500?

3)Also, What exactly is Used Margin(UM)? And why is it negative after a sale?

My account statement looks like this:

AM: 10000

UM: -10000

AC: 10000

4) Since it shows Rs 10000 as my AC and AM, does it mean that I can use the FULL amount to buy another stock or I can only buy upto Rs 7500 on that same day? Or do I have to wait for the UM to be zero and WHY?

Your feedback and clarification would be greatly appreciated.

Let's say I have 2 unsettled lots of futures in my account
 Assumed lot size : 15 at buy price of 100/- per share... so a total of 30 futures @ $30 \times 100 = 3000/-$

Now on a new trading day I buy 2 more lots at 80/- per share ($30 \times 80 = 2400/-$)
 My unsettled lots on this day now show 4 lots at an average price of 90/- now

In this case, if on the same trading day (day 2) I sell 2 lots @85/- , which of the lots will be considered sold ? The same day ones or the older ones – that is, Will my P&L show a profit or a loss ? Or will the average price of 4 lots be considered ?

My friend bought Dabur 555 CE of June Expiry and it went ITM on monthly expiry and as the contract was not tradeable, my friend had to take delivery of shares on June 29. Now the broker account showed a shortfall of around 7 lakhs, so my friend deposited cash and took delivery of shares and sold the shares at 600 per share after receiving the delivery, what is the cost of receiving Dabur in physical settlement for my friend? is it the strike price meaning 555 or the closing price of the monthly expiry day? and how will monetary transaction take place in this case?

I have a simple query. I am having a zerodha account. Under portfolio page, invested value is shown. This invested value must have a relation with the money transferred by me to zerodha.

My question :

What is the formula relating invested value, fund available and money transferred to zerodha by the investor.

Request please give specific reply depicting the clear relationship in between above i.e.

Invested value

Money transferred and Fund available.

Regards.

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
December 31, 2023 at 6:57 am

Invested value is the value of funds invested in market. For example, you can transfer 1L to your trading account, of which you buy 45K worth of stocks. Then invested value is 45K, and 65K is the balance available. You can use the balance available for any further trading or investing activity in the market.

A conceptual question.

Why is there a need for T+1 or T+2 cycle? If the brokers merely need to change the name of holder from person X to person Y and deliver money to person X in lieu of the same, why can't this be done instantaneously.

Okay maybe at the bank's end, the clearing might take time, but if its essentially changing the holder name from one person to another in an already held pool of equity by the stock broker / depository, why does that not happen instantenously?

(I'm thinking of something like UPI, where the payment is made instantenously, since all banks have to do is change the ownership of already held funds from one person to another)

There is a backend process, Abhinav. Money has to be debited from buyer, credited to seller, and shares have to be debited from seller, credited to buyer. Ensure no auction here and all that stuff. By the way, T+1 is a big step forward!

Lets suppose there is only one person selling 10 shares at Rs 100 and I put a limit order for just 2 shares at Rs 100 so will I get my shares or will the order not get executed until someone is willing to sell just 2 shares at Rs 100?

Hey Karthik, I am new to Zerodha and have two questions-

1. I bought 2 shares of idea and sold 1 on the same day that is today but I noticed despite the market price matching my limit price and the bulk of transactions of idea shares happening my buy and sell is taking quite a lot of time. Is it because no one is selling just 2 shares and buying just 1 share?
2. Do I need to pay DP charge for the above transaction?

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
February 28, 2023 at 10:31 am

- 1) Yeah, it depends on how the market is moving and the liquidity at that point
- 2) Nope, since this is an intraday trade

I have confusion .

I had earned profit of ₹ 748 in intraday with leverage. I had ₹ 4154 in my available margin. In the evening ₹ 343 was deducted as a charges and taxes of the total trade now i am worried weather i will get full ₹748 of my profit. or some money will be deducted o

From that amount also because its showing only ₹405 in unsettled credits WHICH is exactly 343 less than the profits expected ($748 - 343 = 405$). so will get ₹ 343 back or not .

Hi, I had some funds in my account. Today I found out that the fund has been removed from the account. Upon checking the statement, I saw something like \"Net settlement for Equity\". Any idea why this happened and where did my money go? The transaction dates back to 02/05/2022 and it was a national holiday on 03/05/2022 so I take it that I am supposed to wait for the funds to be credited into my bank account till T+2 which is till 05/05/2022.

1. Can i buy those shares back if they are available at Rs.40 the same day and will there be any penalty or charges other than normal charges for every trade.
2. And will DP Charges be charged for the sale i made of 10 share and then bought them back or no dp charge will be charged.

Hi Kartik sir,

Could you please shed some light on how brokers fix up permissible leverages for intraday trading? Do they use VAR? Also, if the stock moves against the client at a rate that is greater than the original leverage so much so that it hits the circuit, will the RMS of the broker proactively square off the trade the moment margin money becomes NIL or will they allow this trade to move into T+3 settlement a.k.a the auction ? (Assuming the retail client has moved enough funds to cover the margin requirement alone)

And if so, how will the broker collect the balance amount (if any) from the client? Are there practically any client accounts that are classified as bad debts at the brokers end? Is that even possible?

Regards!

Reply

o Karthik Rangappa says:

April 13, 2022 at 9:06 am

Akhil, Leverage for Equity trading is capped at 5X today. This is because SEBI has mandated an upfront margin collection of 20%. So the max you can get on any scrip is 5 times. If the risk is higher, leverage provided will be lower.

When a client takes an intraday equity trade, the client assumes all risks that come with such positions. While the broker can attempt to square off positions, the onus lies on the client. If in the event that the trade has to be settled in the auction market, the client is liable to bring in the debit balance failing which an interest at the rate of 0.05% on such debit balance is charged.

The broker's actions for recovering such debit include, but are not limited to: filing an arbitration with the Stock Exchange, serving a notice to the client for recovery etc.

Thank you sir!

I analysed the trades in juxtaposition with the settlement mechanism and hence, the question.

Ain't the MIS trades net settled? If I am not getting a hit on my demat, did I ever buy anything? Because, the buy deal would crystallize if and only if the ownership of the security passes onto me against which I transfer the requisite money. But In MIS trades, the shares would be directly passed on to the final buyers demat and he is the one who pays for the shares. isn't it? My trading account will be credited or debited as the case may be with the differential! So, how are the two trades independent when they are settled net?

P.S. I beg your pardon for I had executed MIS trades years before and I am not so sure about the settlement mechanism these days! But I for some reason believe that they would still be net settled! Please correct me if I am wrong.

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
March 23, 2022 at 7:10 pm

Thats correct, Akhil. All MIS trades are intraday and net settled. No shares are credited or debited to your account. But beware, if the stock that you trade hits a circuit, then you could be in trouble.

Reply

211.  Akhil Iyer says:
March 22, 2022 at 9:23 pm

Hello Karthik sir,

It's been a while that I have been thinking of this aspect and would like to know your thoughts on the same! It's about the MIS a.k.a the intraday trades under equity segment.

Isn't it equivalent to being an intermediary who guarantees :-

1. the buyer of the security; the delivery of x number of shares and
2. the seller of the security; the delivery of x amount of rupees.

To illustrate it better with an example, say I execute a MIS trade by buying 100 shares of BEPL at 132 Rs. a piece and on the same day sell 100 shares of BEPL at 135 Rs. a piece. Thus, I take hold of 100 BEPL shares of the seller guaranteeing him Rs 132 per piece in return and sell those at 135 and return 132 to him and keep 3 Rs per scrip as my commission for acting as an intermediary. Not everything would be this fun had I been able to find a buyer for BEPL at 130 Rs. a piece. Thus, I'll put 2 Rs per piece from my pocket and return the guaranteed 132 Rs. to the seller of BEPL. This 2 Rs. per scrip would in turn represent the guarantee cost. Obviously instead of me doing this, my broker would do it and credit my account with commission or debit it with guarantee cost (plus charge me for transaction costs).

I can construct a similar example for a sell first buy later trade (Yes! On an intraday basis).

Sir, So here is the question! Do you find Sense in these? Is my logic consistent with the settlement process?

P.S. I've been an avid reader of your content through Varsity and I admire your efforts and thoughts!

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
March 23, 2022 at 10:52 am

Akhil, so the way it works is that each of these trades is an independent trade and one is not connected to another.

Trade 1 – You buy 100 @ 132, so someone sells this to you at 132. Deal done.

Trade 2 – You sell 100 @ 135, so someone buys this from you at 135. Deal done.

Trade 1 is not related to Trade 2.

So a broker gets money 1 day in advance from its customers on Day T before they part with the same to NSE/BSE on T+1. So does NSE/BSE get it one day in advance it seems before its transferred to the person owning the shares...

A large broker could have a core amount sitting in his bank a/c every day that r could technically be invested in Liquid funds that generate 4% per annum ??? This is free money in addition to brokerage etc already charged

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
March 19, 2022 at 8:02 am

Its not necessary for a customer to transfer money 1 day in advance. If you decide to buy 100 shares today, then just before buying the shares you can transfer the funds from your bank to your trading account. The main point to note is that you should have funds in your transaction before you buy, without funds, the transaction wont go through.

23rd Tuesday again in cnc purchased same share 100qty.
Selling same share qty 100 on 25th Thursday in cnc

My question is that as of now you are not taking this Share from my credited demat account but taking this your pool account which was not yet credited to my demat account.

I want you to take it from my demat account instead of from your pool account because every transaction is done in cnc mode.

How could I achieve this. Please reply

All shares are credited and debited from your demat account only. 21st shares will be fully settled on 23rd i.e T+2, 23rd shares will be settled on 25th.

Hello,

I hope you are doing well

My question is I want to sell my account shares and at the same time same shares I want to buy at almost same price in my wife account. But i don't have funds to buy, the funds which will come on the (T + 2) After 2-3 days price may flactuate a lot, this is what I want to avoid.

Is there any solution for this.

Can i transfer the shares and get them reflected in my wife's account.

Thanks

o Karthik Rangappa says:

No Praveen, in fact after you sell it takes T+2 days for the funds to fully settle, after which you will have to withdraw the funds from your trading account to your bank account and then transfer to your wife's account. So for all practical purposes, buffer T+3 days.

Hey Karthik! Many thanks for such crisp and clear articles.

I've gained some doubts from a question that a user had earlier posted. Kindly clarify!

1. "If we buy an equity today and we sell them on the same day, it will be an intraday trade. In this trade the equity never actually hits the demat account but we only trade the price difference."

Q – What exactly are we transacting in an intraday trade?

Since traders in this format are essentially trading price differences, and given the fact that an intraday trade doesn't credit tangible shares to a user, are intraday traders buying and selling SHARES?

The only way this would make sense to me is if an intraday trader is in fact an owner of a share but the ownership is time restricted to a day.

THIS LEADS ME TO MY NEXT QUESTION –

Q – If a buyer A places a CNC order of a share X at price Y, and a seller B places a MIS order of share X at price Y, would this result in a trade? Note that buyer A wishes to go long with these shares.

- 1) Yes, think about buying a 200 Rupee movie ticket for the morning show and your friend asks you to sell him that ticket for Rs.250, this is an intraday day trade on the movie ticket. Its the same with stocks.
- 2) Yes, as long as the price for the buyer and seller match the trade will go through.

IF the stock is sold then it also requires to be executed in T+2days

If I have traded in MIS then funds will be received if i sell the stock within the same day.
Also if I buy in MIS will the shares get transferred within minutes?

If I buy the share using MIS then

- 2) Will it automatically be sold before the trade day closing.
- 3) If the stocks gets sold automatically is there any algorithm that the share will be directly sold on the higher price of the Ask price slot.

A) If I am shorting means immediately if I had buy the stock I experience uptrend for 3% and if the stock keeps falling then I sell.

B) For longing means to carry the stock for more than 1 day like CNC?

- 1) We provide you credit to the extent of the shares sold on the same day. So you can buy Y shares the same day. But do account for the applicable charges
- 2) Its the same, you get credit to the extent of sale. So you can buy shares of Y the same day.

I have a NRE ACCOUNT and I recently sold a lot of shares but no such credit facility i could see on the app. Will have to wait for 3 more days again to trade is it ?

1. Are they all counted in intraday selling?
2. can i sell only that 100 share in same day! If yes how i can know.
3. Can i sell only that 50 share that already in my demat account separately?

Reply

- 1) Shares bought and sold on 2nd is intraday. Shares bought on 1st is held in DEMAT
- 2) You mean to say that you want to sell 50 bought on 2nd and sell 100 bought on 1st? If yes, then you will have to sell 150, but this will ensure you sell 100 + 50
- 3) Similar to above

If i buy a share today say for 100 rs as CNC (investment).
 After say 10 days its value is 500

How much will be the exact net amount i will get after all deduction.

Here without any deductions profit is 400.

Thank you Karthik for your quick response. I have one more query

1) I am planning to buy intraday equity (ex: SAIL at 120), I am getting 5 times extra and I have 60000 Rupees in zerodha, so I can get 2500 shares for intraday.

if I sell on that same day once all with some profit/loss, so I can't use that 60000 again for intraday right? or still I can use intraday using that 60000 and how many times in a day?

or since I sell that and 20% margin required as per the rule, all those 60000 not available on that day, if yes, when it will be available?

Thanks

Hi, Please can you clarify on below queries.

- 1) If I buy 100 shares on Monday (ex: SAIL at 120 Rupees) with CNC, Later it went to 125 on same day. I know I can sell on same day after converting to MIS and exit, In this case can I get 100*5 rupees (of course in that 500 rupees minus all required charges)?
- 2) Same shares purchased through CNC I am planning to sell on T1 (Tuesday), in this case no need to convert just exit and give the price? In this scenario only taxes will deduct (no Zerodha delivery charges) and remaining profit/loss will debit/credit on Thursday right?
- 3) Same shares purchased through CNC I am planning to sell on T2 (Wednesday), but showing as T1 in my holding not T2, in this case also same applicable like question 2? I assume no extra charges, since SAIL is liquid stock?

Please can you confirm, Thanks in Advance.

Hello Karthik, my qty shows "0" for equities bought under CNC and a small font T1 with quantity and the zero next. It takes like a week for holding quantity to show up on the holdings page, before which I've sold them off. Probably I've paid tons of DP to zerodha. As just now by reading this article I got to know on DP charges.

Zerodha is pretty chaotic. Especially when I try to raise a ticket and I have to go by default question which doesn't even fit to my query.

Everything is everywhere. Too much of unstreamlined info. Too many messages and mails.

I used to trade 13 yrs ago on with tiger, now just got zerodha. The customer care sucks

I don't get answers to my ticket.

Who do I contact. Seriously!! I mean seriously, I bought some 200 equities of a particular company that shows on the contract and not on trade book. It didn't show on holdings either. Zerodha sold it because of their own technical glitch. I know what happened. Raised many tickets, no reply. Shame!!!

Unethical to not respond, unethical to not own fault of technical glitch.

I'm really interested to hear how zerodha sold my equities I bought around at 2pm at 12pm 🤔🤔🤔🤔

The contract shows so. Now I feel I should not have bought those shares.

The buy and sell execution is so delayed, ine doesn't know if the order is executed or pending for atleast 5 min. This delay is not worth it. As in 5min I would have lost a lot.

Hey Kartik,

First of all, your replies are very crisp and easy to understand.

I am a research scientist and don't know much about the stock market or how it works. But I have finally started (Peer pressure!)

Suppose, I buy One SBI stock today i.e. Monday for Rs 100 as CNC.

Scenario 1 – The price of the SBI stock reached 110. So I decide to sell it and earn 10rs profit.

What will be the charges or taxes for this? Will I get 110 back or will I lose some money from the initial 100 as well?

Scenario 2 – On Tuesday, the SBI stock reached 110. Same question as posted for scenario 1.

Scenario 3 – On Wednesday, the SBI stock reached 110. Same question as posted for scenario 1.

Scenario 4 – Now that the stock is in my demat account, I sell the share for 110 rs. How much will I receive after selling the stock for 110 rs, after all the deductions such as DP charges or any other charges (please specify only the amount)?

Since in scenario 1, 2, 3, the stock was practically not in my demat account and I sold it, what will be the repercussions? Will DP charge apply in scenario 1, 2, 3?

Thanks!

Glad you liked the content, Lijo. Btw, don't get into the markets out of FOMO or peer pressure, its not the right way to start 😊

Get in only after you fully understand the risk involved.

1) You will get back 110, but there are few charges applicable. I'd suggest you use this to figure them out – <https://zerodha.com/brokerage-calculator/#tab-equities>

2) Same answer as above

3) Same answer as above

4) Same answer as above :). I'd suggest you look at the complete charge list as well – <https://zerodha.com/charges/#tab-equities>

DP charges will be applicable in scenarios 2 to 4.

Today my holdings shows Qty : 20 T1: 20 for X.

My question is, (1) if I sell 20 stocks today, will it be counted as BTST? Or it will deducted from my Demat stocks first and T1 count will remain as is?

(2) What if I sell 30 stocks today of company X? As I have 20 stocks in demat and 20 as T1 as of today? How stocks will be accounted? What charges applicable to that?

1. The shares from your demat will be marked for delivery. The T1 shares will continue to show up until it is settled.

2. The 20 shares already available in your demat account will be marked for delivery. The remaining 10 shares will be given from the 20 shares you purchased yesterday. The debit of these 10 shares will happen once you have received the credit of the 20 shares on trading + 2 days (T+2).

The DP charges will be charged twice for such a transaction along with the other charges. Do go through this support article to understand the whole process in detail.

Hi karthik !

one Question in mind, whenever we do intraday trading does it means that opposite party is also intraday trader.

Eg if on 21/07/2021 I sold 100 tata motors shares on 9.20 AM then does it means that Purchaser is also Intraday buyer ? Because at the end of the day total purchase and sale of intraday should match and difference should be equal to 0.

IF we go on assumption that Intraday stocks can also be sold to delivery CNC buyer then how will the position of short seller will cleared? Because of this additional 100 shares are entered in market which are not actually available, right.

I had once sold the shares in intraday which were trading at upper circuit and no seller was available for shares and when it clocks 3.20 my broker was unable to buy shares, my position was open even after the market closed.

And on next day when stock was again on upper circuit level my broker messaging me to make shares available but there was no option from where should i buy shares which are not available becoz of high demand. Then finally position was settled at 20 % extra value.

Now question is daily crores of shares are sold intraday then how it works suppose if somebody convert his intraday buy position from intraday to cnc then how balance will match ? If delivery stocks are sold to intraday buyers then how will intraday buyer will clear his position at the end of the day?

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
July 18, 2021 at 9:05 am

Not really, at the exchange level, the exchange only looks at net obligation to a broker. Intraday and delivery based trades as just broker conventions. Btw, if any mismatch happens, then the shares are auctioned off, this is a common occurrence when shares hit circuits.

Hi, I'm confused about this can you clear it:-

1. I only buy in CNC don't do intraday, but in some cases, I don't want to hold it for more and sell it before the long term period so I would be charging the intraday prices + the DP charges because the shares are in my Demat account for days. So am I end up paying double the amount + transaction charges that apply in selling.

2. And what should be an ideal amount I minus from my profit of that share so I get to know what I'm getting after all the charges.

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:

Dear Karthik,
While going through my console section for the settlement of account in last one week and then my consolidated account since the time I started trading, I got bit confused with the deductions section. In the console, there is a column which gives the Consolidated report of following for the chosen period:

1. Realised P/L
2. Charges
3. Other Credits and Debits
4. Net Realised P/L

From my calculations and understanding, I came to the following conclusion:

1. The Realised P/L is the actual P/L.
2. Charges are the Brokerage, Taxes, Exchange, SEBI, etc. charges
3. This I am unable to understand. It constitutes good amount. What is all included in the other credits and debits?
4. = 1. – 2. – 3.

So, My query is limited to 3. above.

According to my religious belief I can't sell something which I don't possess or own. For that matter I need to understand that if I buy the stock do I immediately become the owner of that stock or I become the owner after T+2. This will help me to understand if I can do Intraday trading or not.

You can do all that with Crypto because it's unregulated. You can't do that with stocks since there are rules set by the regulators and exchanges which needs to be followed. These rules are good because these rules are there to protect the common retail investor.

For example: I do sell nifty Put option at 70 rupees and my target is 50 rupees which is achieved and still going in profit and i place order to buy (toTake Profit) at market price but what if there is low volume and there is no buyer. So what will happen at square of time. Will broker close it ? Will i get my profit ? Or i will loss all of my money ?

Hi,

I did this with a stock today.

I sold all my holdings by placing order at 9 am as a limit order

My order was shown as completed at 9.07 am.

I wonder if I had placed an AMO order before 9 am, whether it would have gotten placed before matching occurs at 9.07 am or at 9.15, when matching has finished, and price had fallen a bit further.

I had ~ 3.5k in my account. After selling 7000 shares, I could buy back only 5800 initially, then for the remaining batch, I could buy 1000, then the remaining 200.

The profit is not showing in my account. My fund balance is still 3.5 k, although in profit and loss segment my profit is 17.5k.

This was the only trade I did today.

Hi, I have a Q.

Suppose I have 100 shares of company A priced at Rs 1000.

The news comes about quarterly results in after market hours on Monday, and a loss is reported.

I don't want to sell shares coz I think long term outlook is good, but I want to profit from quarterly results.

My Qs are:

If I place AMO order to sell at Market Price, will my order be placed at 9 am on Tuesday or later?

Is there a difference between placing AMO order before 9 am on Tuesday, and placing a Sell order at 9 am on Tuesday?

Also does choosing a particular type of order affect the charges levied or the type of trade (intraday vs delivery) for tax purposes?

If I sell 100 shares, suppose at 1000 only, the amount in my margin will reflect ~81000 only I think, if I had only 1k in my account.

If the price of the share falls to 950 later in the day, and I want to buy back my shares, will it make a difference if I buy back the entire lot of 100 in one go (I will have to add extra money to my account to account for the 20% SEBI Margin) or if I buy in smaller lots, say first buying 80 shares, then 15, then 5.

Will my type of trade be intraday in both cases or will it be delivery trade, for the purpose of taxation?

When will the intraday profit be reflected in my account?

Finally, does the trade classify as intraday if the buy and sell amount is exactly the same? What happens if I sell 100, and buy 90, or sell 100, add some more money and buy 110?

Regards

There is no difference, all orders before 9:15 AM are considered AMO. No, changes are based on your actions i.e. if you buy in CNC and sell the same day, it will be considered intraday and intraday brokerage will be applicable.

You'd not need margin to cover your position right? Profits will be reflected on the same day.

Hi Karthik,

I have not given power of attorney to zerodha, everytime i sell a stock i need to do the authorization with tpin and otp.

Suppose I sold a put of reliance at 1900 and it becomes ITM on the day of expiry, will there be any extra steps for allotment of shares?

2) Also clear my doubt in case of call if it comes ITM the shares will automatically debit or there will be some different process for those who have not given Power of attorney?

Kindly clear my doubts thank you

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:

1) TPIN is only for debit, not credit of shares

2) Yes, you are required to authorise. YOU will get a push notification on Kite for authorization, which you will have to Jatin. In case you don't, it will be treated as short delivery.

I have a question that might seem silly.

Here is a situation to make my question be comprehended better. A company decides to go public and starts to sell its allotted shares at a FV of 10 rupees. It receives the initial amount of the shares being sold from a merchant bank for capital expenditure. After x number of years, the price per share is 100 rupees and is now being traded between buyer and seller and the money circulates only between them. Does the company receive any further money for capital expenditure with changing share price and if yes, how is it done since the money is only circulated between the accounts of buyer and seller?

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
May 25, 2021 at 9:12 am

No, once the company lists, the increase or decrease in prices does not really matter to the company Arya. Of course, shareholders wealth increases with the increase in share price.

Also, I didn't buy any securities on T + 2 except investing in a mutual fund (after adding sufficient funds beforehand), which I believe should not be of concern since the 20% upfront margin is against NSE EQ row and not MF row in the "Daily Margin Statement" and the margin is corresponding to the CNC trade done on T day.

Nakul, let me know if I am miscalculated somewhere.

Thanks for replying! I have raised a ticket mentioning the exact dates using the link shared by you with my client ID.
I hope you guys can help resolve this at the earliest.

Reply556. Mohit says:April 2, 2021 at 3:35 am

Hi,

I bought some shares in CNC mode for long term investment on T day. As explained by you, the full amount (+charges) were deducted on the same day from funds/cash and I received the ccn. Also, the "Daily Margin Statement" for the T-day still shows the full amount (+charges) in the NSE EQ as Funds while simultaneously mentioning 20% of amount as Total upfront margin. Now, this is fine for T day as $(\text{full amount} - \text{Total upfront}) > 0$ and there is no penalty.

On T+ 1 day:

The "Daily Margin Statement" is the exact same as for the T day. Still +ve and so no penalty.

On T+2 day:

Here there is a problem.

The NSE EQ funds field in the "Daily Margin Statement" now doesn't include the Full amount (since maybe the transaction of shares is now completed & reflected) but the 20% of amount is still shown as Total upfront margin which in net takes the balance in Daily Margin Statement negative, leading to penalty.

Can you please tell why is there such discrepancy? Do I have to put an EXTRA 20% as cash inspite of buying full price on CNC? If yes, for how long?

Replyo Nakul Kulkarni says:April 3, 2021 at 8:22 pm

Hey Mohit, this won't be the case on T+2 unless you've bought more securities on the same day. The margin statement gets the total margin requirement from the margin file that we receive from the exchange. The total value of the trade is reduced only after the trade is settled. If you can provide us your client id and the dates where you've observed this, we'll be able to check and get back to you on this. You can also raise a ticket here with the details.

If funds are available in my Zerodha account the very next day of a sale of shares from my trading account, then what is the concept of T+1 and T+2 days. To give an example – I sold 100 shares of Reliance (were bought long back) for say Rs.100,000/- yesterday (Monday), the funds show as available today (Tuesday) such that I can buy shares of say SBI. Then what is concept money getting credited on end of T+2 days (i.e. end of Wednesday), when I can actually use the funds to buy shares of SBI on Tuesday itself.

Replyo Karthik Rangappa says:April 1, 2021 at 11:01 am

You cannot withdraw the funds on T+1 as technically this is a credit given to you on T+1, which you can use to buy other stocks. Your funds will be available to withdraw on T+2.

Hello Karthik.

I have a query . Say, I buy 100 shares of stock ST1 on Day 1. It takes T+2 days for the shares to get credited to my Demat account. Now, say , once it is credited to my demat account, say on T+3 , I sell 100 shares of that stock ST1 and also on the same day , I buy 50 shares of the same stock ST1 . Now, when will these 50 shares get credited to my demat account. Will that also be after T+2 days after I buy the 50 shares?

I want to know after how many days would I own those 50 shares? Please help clarify this query.

Reply

o Karthik Rangappa says:

March 11, 2021 at 10:13 pm

Asif, 50 shares will be debited from DEMAT and the rest 50 is considered as intraday. So you\'d get nothing into your DEMAT. This assuming that the share you are talking about is not in T2T category. If yes, then 100 will get debited and the 50 will be credited on a T+2 basis.

Hi,

At the onset I thank you for the great platform for trading with so many ways of analyzing through streak.

I have a very simple query

Day 3 – Buy 10 shares- A worth 10,000 Rs.

Day 4 – Sell 10 Shares – A worth 20,000 Rs. (Profit of 10,000)

Day 4 – Buy again the same share for 10,000 Rs

Query :

1. Profit of 10,000 do I get credited to my account (basically I sell a share on profit & again buy the same share same day at lower price how much profit am I eligible to receive)

Reply

◦  Karthik Rangappa says:
January 23, 2021 at 11:59 am

You get the credit (which you can withdraw) for these shares on T+2 basis. But as soon as you sell, 80% credit is given to you on the same day which can be used for buying more shares.

Abdur, this is considered on a FIFO basis i.e. first-in, first-out basis. So the first 100 will be considered as being sold.

Hi Karthik and anyone who may be able to help me, 🙏

I'm having slight difficulty with the settlement understanding and margins as per the new rules from Dec 1st 2020.

1. Say I bought 100 qty shares of xyz company on 1st jan 2020 and it was Monday.
2. On 5th jan which is Friday, I sell the 100 qty holdings. The settlement for this trade would be T+2. Hence Tuesday.
3. My question is, can I write/sell to open Bank nifty options (which I intend to hold over night) on Tuesday morning it self WITHOUT getting any exchange margin penalty? (Since I will require the sale proceeds from Friday as margin for the short option position) Or will I be able to only place a new short option position on Wednesday morning in order to not get a exchange penalty?

Thanks in advance for all your help and time.

Now if I sell 5 shares out of those 20, which five will be that shares?
Shall I get the profit on avg. price or on original price at which I had bought those 5 shares?

Hi Karthik,

I had bought 20 PNB shares @32.55 under CNC. These 20 shares were in my Demat account.

Yesterday I bought another 70 PNB Shares @ 35.15 under CNC which were showing in my position.

Now when I yesterday only tried to sell my 20 shares lying in my Demat account@ 35.65 I could not sell as 20 shares were deducted from my open position only.

Result- Profit credited to my account if shares from my Demat holdings would have been sold ($20 \times 35.65 - 20 \times 32.55$) = 713-651 = Rs 62 but I received only ($20 \times 35.65 - 20 \times 35.15$) = 713-703 = Rs 10 for my positions.

Am I not allowed to sell my shares lying in Demat holding if I have open position in the same stock ?

Hello Karthik

Compliments of the Season! Greetings to you and your team.

Asking this question as couldn't find any in these comments.

I understand that BTST is possible if I sell the shares on T+1. However, would it be the same if the shares are sold on T+2 before EOD? And if done what would be the financial impact. How to tackle this when I have my SL GTT orders already placed.

Regards

T+2 would be a regular sale. Once this goes through, you can cancel the GTT.

Hello Sir,

I have questions regarding brokers role in settlement.

1. What if I have given POA to broker, can broker sell my shares without my knowledge and used my money and can suddenly disappear with my money and stocks.
Is there any help if I choose not to provide POA.

2. How we should protect ourselves, If I want to purchase shares for long term. And even if broker gets bankrupt or whatever, I am fully secured.

Thanks you in advance.

I am asking regarding the settlement for the new rule that was implemented from sep-2020. Previously u move the share on T+1 Day from the demat account now i.e after sep-2020 you are moving on T-Day itself. Then how about settlement for the dividend, bonus issue, right Issue, Buy Back,....stocks on Ex. Dividend date, Ex. Bonus date, Ex. Right issue date,.....? Usually record date will be next trading day of Ex. Dividend date, Ex. Bonus date, Ex. Right issue date..... Suppose if anyone sell the share on Ex.dividend date, you move the share from the demat account on the same day i.e Ex.dividend date itself not on the record date, then how will the person get dividend for the shares though she/he sells the share on the Ex-dividend date. (on the record date the shares wont be on her/his demat account and also on the broker pool account)

Reply

- o  Nakul Kulkarni says:
October 20, 2020 at 11:50 am

Yes, currently we debit the stocks from your demat account on the trading day itself for your delivery sell transactions and do an early pay-in to the exchange. The securities are moved to an early pay-in pool account where the securities are blocked by the clearing corporation (CC). The CC debits these securities from the early payin pool account two days after the trading day (T+2). Since the securities will be in our pool account on the record date, for the delivery sell transactions executed on the ex-date and the record date, the corporate action credit happens to us. This is then passed on to the respective client's account. Any cash credit, like dividends, is reconciled and settled in your trading account and you'll be able to see the credit on your funds statement in a week's time. Any securities credits through a bonus, split, etc are reconciled and credited to your demat account.

How Zerodha is managing this

<https://upstox.com/announcements/demat-account/important-operational-changes-in-the-settlement-process/>

Important operational changes in the settlement process

There has been an introduction of a new margining process by the regulator and Exchanges, recently.

As part of our goal to provide you with the best trading exposures and seamless reporting of your margins to the Exchange, we have made some changes in our operations.

These changes mean that the shares you sell on the Trade day (T-Day) may be moved by us to the Early Pay-In (POOL) Account on the T-Day or T+1 Day.

This means that on the day that you sell your shares, we may move it from your Demat account, or your shares that may be lying in the Unpaid account or in our Pool Account, and present it to the Exchange for the settlement purpose on the same day i.e. T-Day or the Next Day i.e. T+1 Day.

On account of these changes, starting today, if you wish to participate / take advantage of any corporate action like Buy Back, Right Issue, and others, we request you to hold the shares in your account until the record date. In case shares are sold before or on the record date and are presented by us to the Exchange for settlement, as per the above schedule, Upstox shall not be held responsible or liable for not being able to participate in such corporate action, due to the non-availability of such shares in your account.

It is out dated system, the technology, stream system developed now thus real time settlement may be possible. If money transferred across different banks why can't shares? Even though there is no any physical settlement of shares involved now- electronic documents interchanged. I hope industry will develop the safe and secure system soon.

Not so straight forward, Arun. Broking tech is 10x more complex compared to banking. There are several moving parts and custodians involved, each one with their own limitations and processes. Systems and processes have evolved significantly, but I don't know if the real-time settlement will happen anytime over the next few years.

Reply

- o Nakul Kulkarni says:
September 18, 2020 at 11:25 pm

Hey Nazeer, when you buy and sell the same stock on the same day, it is considered as an intraday transaction. In your case, out of the 10 qty of Indigo sold 4 qty is considered as an intraday trade, and the remaining 6 qty is considered to be a delivery sell transaction. Hence, the position will show -6 qty as this has been sold from your holdings.

That is because the next day's trade is considered intraday and it wont have any impact on your buy average. However, you've bought 7 shares extra, which will change your buy average.

Hi,
Just want to know, what if I sell the holding share in CNC which is in BSE & after that changed the position to MIS & again buy back in NSE when price goes down, will it be considered Intraday. Because this didn't happen, the share was squared off at 3:20pm with more price.

Is there anything that trade should be done in same Indices can't change from NSE to BSE or vice versa.

Hi, please help !!

I have a query – suppose I bought a 300 shares @Rs500 and after 2-3 days sold them at 550. Now on same day after one hour I again bought same share of qty 320 @529 (qty increased from the profit I earned).

Now my portfolio is like same 300 shares in my account with 20 as traded qty (T20) with an average of 505. Now I have questions on this –

1. What does this mean.
2. Why the average is not 520 as I bought all 320 shares again at the price of 520.
3. Yesterday I had profit of 15000/- so bought extra 20 shares and now the holding is 320 shares. But now the current price is 525, so the profit should be $320 \times 5 = 1500$, but is showing profit from an average of 505 i.e again $320 \times 20 = 6400$. How is this calculated ?
4. Haven't I earned my profit yesterday ? But then how I'm able to buy those extra shares.....

It's really confusing, to me also and to the one who is reading.

Please understand and ans. Thanking you in advance. 🙏

Hi Sir,

Next day i do intra on same stock [Buy at 162 & Sell at 164] then i squareoff my CNC at 166.50 Rs. Here i overall made 600Rs profit. After that on same day i bought 100 shares at 166.50 in MIS and then i convert it to CNC . But today [13/8/20] in my tradebook i see buy average Rs.163.5, sell average Rs.164.83 for 150 quantity and my realised profit is just 200Rs. What happen to my profit i made yesterday?. And in holdings i see 100 shares at Avg price 162.50. I totally confused sir. please reply me

Reply

o  Nakul Kulkarni says:

August 13, 2020 at 10:12 pm

Hey Jannath, the first thing you need to know is that CNC and MIS are just product types offered by us to manage leverages, it doesn't really denote the movement of securities in your demat account. If you place a CNC sell order and buy back the same quantity of the stock in CNC on the same day, it is still an intraday trade.

Now in your case, the 50 qty CNC sell at 166.50 and the 50 qty (out of the 100 qty) CNC buy at 166.50 is considered to be an intraday trade. Your original holding of 50 qty at Rs. 158.50 will remain and another 50 qty brought at 166.50 will get added to your holdings. This will bring the holding average for the 100 qty to 162.50.

You can go through this support article for more.

1. Whenever I buy any stocks, once the order is executed, my portfolio grows (in number). And that, too, within an hour. So, when you say, "All equity/stock settlements in India happen on a T+2 basis" – do you mean that although the number of shares may increase, the actual shares won't be credited in my DEMAT account (if I'm the buyer)?

2. If we were to follow the T+2 framework, although the shares I've bought haven't been credited in my DEMAT account, will any changes in its growth be taken into account in the processing days?

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:

1) The number of shares will remain the same, what can grow/degrow is the price of the share. Yes, if you buy shares today, it will get settled meaning, it will get credited to your DEMAT on T+2 basis.

2) Yes, if the share price increases/decreases, so will your profit or loss. The P&L is attributed right from the time you buy.

First of all, I bought delivery shares. After 15 days I sold it and that day means that sold day I bought another share of different company from sold shares money. Contract note gives me the lots of obligation pay that deducted in my demat account. My question is that, my debited money will get it or not. If not then what I want to do to not much obligation money will debit.

Hi Karthik,

I have a very stupid doubt about stop loss, I couldn't find a specific chapter to ask the question, so I am asking it here. Please answer it.

Suppose I have placed a buy order for a share and also place a stop loss order for it. If, later on, I sell off those shares, will that stop loss order will get cancelled automatically or do I have to manually do it?

Yes, when you sell, the logic of FIFO is considered. This is mainly from the taxation perspective. When you finish buying, an aggregate buy average is computed, so when you start selling the difference in the buy average and sell price is your P&L.

Could you please answer my queries or make a write up on the clearing and settlement process happening with detailed steps and example.

Queries:

1. Zerodha as a Clearing member, how is it different from a Clearing house. I mean what is the difference in role
2. In which part of the Trade life cycle, Netting happens.
3. When a customer places order in Zerodha, is it matched with the orders of other customers of zerodha (if best price is available) or it always goes to exchange directly.

Reply

o Karthik Rangappa says:
June 19, 2020 at 10:18 am

1. Zerodha is a member of the clearing house; clearing house = exchange like nse, bse; clearing member = trading member like being a stock broker
2. In equity segment, netting is done at the end of the day at a client level. Again, it depends on the stock category, if it allows netting to get done. No netting off is done in certain stock categories like t2t; where obligations are derived on a gross basis
3. No, all orders are sent to the exchange directly.

I have a query kindly clarify. I bought 150 shares of Cyient @Rs.220 each on Tuesday in CNC mode. Instead of going into an option "Exit position" I sold 150 shares from the watch list sell option by Thursday at a price of 225rs each in CNC mode. And the end of the day the share price came down to 219Rs . Again I purchased 150 Shares in CNC mode. Later I found that the shares which I bought on Thursday (@219) that only got sold out on the same day. It just seem to be like a intra day trading. Actually the shares which I bought for Rs.220 on Tuesday it still remains in holdings. Kindly clarify why it has happened in that way?

- 1) If I bought 150 shares in CNC mode on Tuesday I could sell those shares by friday or by Monday as per the zerodha policy of T+2 day. Incase if I am selling on the T+1 day or T+2 day then is it necessary to buy 150 shares back within the same day evening?

2) The shares which I sold on Thursday that profit amount was not yet credited until Monday morning.

So approximately when that profit amount will get reflected in my account?

3) If I want to sell a stock from my holdings then do I need to go for an option \"Exit position\" or else I could press the CNC sell option from the watch list itself.

4) In case if I do intraday trading will the profit amount will get reflected on the same day itself?

Thank you.

Karthik Rangappa says:

1) Since you bought and sold shares on Thursday, it was treated as an intraday trade. Your CNC shares continue to stay in the DEMAT. If you are selling from DEMAT (CNC), no need to buy it back unless you intend to do an intraday trade

2) It should be reflected in your account by the next trading day. Do check your ledger report.

3) You can choose between both the options

4) By next trading day.

How Average Price of a share will be calculated in this case for T+2 Days?

For Example: If I Own 450 Qty of shares Worth 100 Rs Each in my Demat Account which is Delivery and bought months back.

Now again If I bought 450 Shares for 110 Rs By Friday and suppose i sold all 350 shares by Tuesday, will it be considered as Intra-day or how it will work.

Also will this affect my Avg price of old 450 shares and Avg price will 105 each?

450@ 100 and 450@110 gives you a buy average of 105. If you sell on 350 on Tuesday, then this is a different trade, not an intraday trade. It won't affect your buy average of 105.

Sir, Suppose, if I purchase RELIANCE share 1@1500. Now Average Price is 1500 Rs. Share price goes down, I purchase RELIANCE share 1@1100. Now average price is 1300 Rs. Share price goes up, Now, I sold 1 share at 1350 @ 50 rs benefits (share 1 @1500 out from Portfolio as per FIFO & now average price is at 1100 Rs). Again share price goes down from 1350 to 1250, and I sold another leftover share 1 @ 1250 (purchase @1100) from Portfolio with the benefit of 150 Rs. Please, tell me, how much profit or loss I have gains (without including any charges) ? How it calculated?

Tabulate all your buys along with quantity and price, multiply the qty and price, sum up all the multiplied values, divide this sum by the total number of shares and this will give you the buy average. Do the same for selling, this will give you the selling average. The difference between buy and sell is the P&L.

Dear team,

I have an issue with on-hold shares which I have sold them today. On June 3rd I bought the 600 TataMotors & 50 RBL Bank Shares and June 4 bought 250 RBL Shares. Ideally today I have sold all of them in MIS trade. But the issue is all of sudden at around 03:21 PM & 3:22 PM two more MIS Buy orders got placed automatically at market price for Tata Motors@112 and RBL@126.50. What could be the issue?

Is Zerodha has treated this sale as Short selling though I have shares in My account?

I request you to clarify.

Thanks
Paramesh

My only intention was that in such examples details of DP charge be mentioned explicitly and that one does not have to search for it in comments. Nevertheless, it would be great if you could answer the following two questions:

1. (General question) Is DP charge applicable on BTST trades?
2. (Specific question) Let's say I bought 10 shares of SBI on Monday. Kindly provide two answers – (a) whether the trade qualifies as BTST and (b) whether DP charge is applicable for the trade – in the following three scenarios:
 Scenario 1: I sell the shares on Tuesday.
 Scenario 2: I sell the shares on Wednesday.
 Scenario 3: I sell the shares on Thursday.

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:
May 20, 2020 at 8:50 pm

1) No, it is applicable only when the shares are debited from your DP. In BTST, the shares would not have hit your DP yet
 Scenario 1 – No DP charges
 Scenario 2 & 3 – Applicable

Reply

868. Ishaan says:

May 19, 2020 at 6:15 pm

It's unbelievable why there is no mention of DP charges in this chapter, and why the DP charge question must be asked separately. Even in the brokerage calculator example, there is no explicit mention of the DP charge (even as a note or caution), and it is only shown somewhere in the list of all charges. Moreover, given that this a Varsity chapter seeking to educate people, especially those who are new to trading and investing, it is a must to mention this cost. This is true more so because newcomers are likely to trade in small amounts initially and they can unknowingly lose a significant percentage of investment in DP charges itself.

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:
May 19, 2020 at 6:51 pm

Sure, DP charges including GST is Rs.15.93/- per scrip. For example, if you sell Rs.10,00,000/- worth of Infosys today, your DP charges will be Rs.15.93/-.

Hi,

I have been trading for a couple of months now, almost always in large cap stocks. I wanted to know the risks involved in buying today and selling tomorrow. I always put a trigger price in the purchase of my stocks and it has worked well for me due to the high volatility right now and while most of my stocks get sold only after the second day, there have been occasions where the stock has sold on the next day (on the rare occasion on the same day too!). I've not faced any issues—is it because they are of low values?

Please clarify my 2 confusions.

1) if I have bought 100 shares (CNC) of Zeel @ 160 and again I buy 100 shares of Zeel @ 145 and now the share price is say 155 . Then can I sell 100 shares which I have bought @145 ? Or if I place an order to sell 100 shares which shares will be deducted ? Does it work in FIFO ?

2) If I have sold shares(CNC) today worth rs.10000 and in my funds the available amount shows 10000. Then can I buy shares of other company the same day with that amount or should I wait till T+2 day to credit the amount and then look for buying ?

Yes, you can sell on T+2, there is no harm. But at times, the buyer could have defaulted which means you may not get the shares on T+2 as expected, although this is a rare occurrence. This means the CNC sell you do on T+2 could result in an auction. So always ensure the shares are in your DEMAT before you sell.

After few days if the price goes up by 540 i want to sell the share which i have purchased for 520.

Could you pls provide the knowledge how to sell it. or how the selling will happen in this situation. Pls help

This works on a FIFO basis. When you sell at 540, it gets offset against the 590 purchase.

Hi Karthik,

Hope you are doing well.

I am new in the share market and last month I have opened Demat account in Zerodha.
I need one clarification, suppose I buy some XYZ company share on Monday and sell on it Thursday(after T2).

Is this selling amount immediately credited in my Demat account? if yes, can I use that amount to buy ABC company share on the same day (Thursday)?

Is there any penalty applicable to the above scenario? I mean to use sell amount on same day?

Thank you in advance.

Thanks & Regards

My question is about Equity delivery CNC.

If I bought a share on 'Monday', so will it be possible for me to SELL that share ON SAME DAY?? i.e on Monday. (FOR CNC delivery)

If yes, then please tell me what is the difference between Intra day and delivery trading? What are the benefits of using MIS over CNC?

Please tell

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
April 7, 2020 at 12:16 pm

Yes, you can and the trade will be considered as an intraday trade. MIS is intraday order type and CNC is when you intend to take delivery of the stock to your DEMAT. When you use MIS, you get intraday leverage. Meaning you can buy for 100 worth when you have only 50 in the account.

Thanks,
Another doubt I read in one varsity chapter that you could be fined/asked to pay penalty if you sell stocks (CNC) before they arrive at you demat account on the evening of T+2 day. This is the chapter where you talk about illiquid stock/ Class B stock, and how they go on the auction route and if there is a big fluctuation in the buying price then the difference would be debited from my DEMAT account by the broker. If this is true should i always sell on T+3 day to avoid any penalty?

1. what if I choose to keep the scrip with me and not doing the intraday? Will I be penalized? If yes, then how much?
2. It has not calculate an average for me. (first I bought 23 qty (LTP 150) then I sold it all then again bought 23 qty (LTP 100). I understand the average would be LTP 125. But when I bought 1 qty (LTP 90), then it is not calculating the average i.e., $(150+100+90) / 3 = 113$. I just gave you an example so that I can explain what I wanted to say.
3. lets say when I first sell my 23 qty (LTP 150), I gained a profit of 500 INR. But when I purchased it again i.e., 23 qty (LTP 100) my profit is also increase. How that calculation is happening. Please explain.

3. I bought RIL shares today at 10:00 AM and sold it at 11:00 AM. But when the price of that stock goes down again I bought it again at 12:00 PM. I wanted to understand how the LTP will be calculated (I believe it is an average but when I purchased a 1 share of RIL again at 1:00 PM then my assumption of average fails). Please help me with it.
4. In continuation of point #3, when I first sell my shares at 11:00 AM. I have gained some profit. But when I bought the shares at 12:00 PM. My Profit amount is gone or some kind of average it started taking. Please help me with it.

- 1) Intraday positions are MIS
- 2) Square off means that you exit the position you have initiated. For example, if you've bought a stock, a square off order for this is to sell the stock

- 3) Yes, works on an average basis. FIFO method is used to calculate this average
- 4) It won't go unless you've made a loss on your 2nd trade

1. What's the problem if I sell my shares before they hit my DEMAT account?

MIS CNC are all tags used by brokers, at the Exchange there's no real meaning of it. So if I've bought in CNC, and the guy who has sold it to me is an MIS the MIS guy will have to buy it back, which means someone else has to sell it. It doesn't really matter who the counterparty to his trade is, for his sake, he'll receive shares if there's a net positive at the end of the trading session.

Q: Suppose I have 100 shares of Infosys @ Rs 700/ AVERAGE COST. The LTP is suppose Rs 750. I undertake the following trade.

SELL 100 SHARES @ Rs 750 LTP = $100 \times 750 = 75000$.

BUY 90 SHARES @ Rs 750 LTP = $90 \times 750 = 67500$.

So it is obvious the AVERAGE COST should now be Rs 750 per share which is the purchase price. But your KITE trading platform still shows the AVERAGE COST as Rs 700 per share instead of Rs 750 per share.

Why is this happening? Please explain.

If the sell and buy transaction is executed the same day, it'll be considered as an intraday transaction since there is no movement of stocks from/to your demat. Front office people are usually client-facing, usually sales and few traders make up the front office. These are the highest-paid folks in the IB. The middle office is risk management, they monitor trader wise and enterprise wise risk positions. The back office guys do the post-trade recon work, most of the IBs have outsourced the back-office task to India.

You need to check if this is in compulsory delivery list, if yes, then you have to take delivery and cannot do BTST.

hi,
I have doubt about settlement. For example, I have sold the shares for Rs.1000/- profit today morning. after it sold, it was showing in my position. the price of that particular share was volatile and it dropped. Finally in my position tab, it was showing my today's P&L is only Rs.200/-. What was the my final profit of Rs.1000 on which i sold my shares or Rs.200 as it is showing in my position. Thank you.

1. I sell it today at 150Rs after that the price goes down so I buy it at 130Rs.
Do I have to pay Depository charges?

2. If i sell it today at 150 Rs and next day buy it at 130Rs.

okay so in the reliance example if we sell only one share at profit of 5 Rs after T+2 days the amount which will be deducted are stt and dp charges ...dp charges of zerodha is 15 rs so even though i sell my share at profit of one rs i will be in loss of 10 rs....is it?
And another question is that if i sell shares of reliance and other 5 companies share on one day will i be charges 6 companies multiplied by *15rs i.e dp charges or else only 15 rs in total please let me know

DP charges are 15.5/- including 18% GST. So yes, this transaction will result in a loss for you. DP charges are applicable on a per scrip basis, so yes, it will be 15.5 multiplied by 6.

– Suppose I buy have 100 Shares on Mondy in CNC.

case1:

– This means I can either carry it or sell it before 3:20pm. Is this right?

Case2:

– In case I do a short selling on Tuesday, then until what time can I close the transaction or buy back the shares to close the intraday (Note: I already purchased the shares on Monday)

Now , suddenly there is a spurt in prices.

I sell OFF HALF of the SHARES.

I wanted to know which shares will get SOLD FIRST.

is it FIRST IN – FIRST OUT ??

(Means the shares which i bought FIRST will get sold FIRST) ??????

the remaining 50 % shares will be shown at an "" AVERAGE COST "".

so , this "" REMAINING "" shares average price is CALCULATED by ZERODHA based on the "" LAST BOUGHT "" 50 % shares ????

buying price : 1225

Selling price : 1227

it shows you have profit of 2 rs in positions but I understand there are charges need to deduct so I checked in zerodha brokerage calculator and its shows as Net P&L is 1.62

I want to understand are there other charges over this trade ?

The brokerage is dependent on the number of orders you place, Bhavesh.

\` Number\` of orders OR purchase price ?

Eg:

(price/share x quantity) = purchase price

total cost of purchase

DP = Depository Participant (Eg. Zerodha)

DP charges are applicable when one sells Demated share (s) from his/her account.

These charges are per day/per scrip. Meaning – whether one sells a single, 10 or 20 shares from his/her demated account in ONE day, or multiple times in ONE day, then 15.93/- (5 CSDL, 8.5 Zerodha + 18 % GST) is charged per day/scrip.

If you sell demated shares of 5 different companies in a day, multiple times in ONE day, then (15.93) x no. of scrips is charged ..

if you hold 10 shares of a company, and sell one on ten different days, then DP charges are applicable 10 times.

A beginner may overlook this.....like I did 😊

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:
August 8, 2019 at 11:38 am

You can sell the script in 1 shot or multiple shots (on a given day), the DP charge is applicable on a per day per scrip basis. If you sell 5 scrips, yes, it will be 5*15.93. Yes, DP charges will be 10 times.

cost of selling a single stock per day in Deliver mode !

Say, I buy 10 shares of a company for Rs.100 each. So total investment is 1000/-. Its a CNC purchase. For some reason, I want to exit from this investment immediately and the value is at par with my purchase price – no loss or gain. M net realized P/L would be sale price + transaction charges – which if sold at par would be negative?

Reply

10.2 – What happens when you buy a stock? – \’ applicable charges\’

Right at the beginning of this topic, there\’s a breakup of the \’charges\’ incurred when one buys a stock. The break up is as under:

Example:

01 Brokerage Zero charges on Equity Delivery or 0.01% or Rs.20/- whichever is lower for intraday trades Zero

02 Security Transaction Charges 0.1% of the turnover 100/-

03 Transaction Charges 0.00325% of the turnover 3.25/-

04 GST 18% of Brokerage + Transaction charges 0.585/-

07 SEBI Charges Rs.10 per crore of transaction 0.1/

(5&6 are missing, if any; else typo)

So, if I buy 1 share at a time, ten times OR buy 10 shares in one go, the \’applicable charges\’ are a pure resultant of the price/share and there are no \’flat rates/minimum charges\’? Is that correct?

Also on DP:

What are DP Charges? What does DP stand for? Why and by whom is it levied? The look and feel of Zerodha is quite user-friendly. Is there an FAQ site?

I scanned through the QnA\’s above and its unlikely that I have missed this discussion. So, if you have 100 shares of Reliance, and decide to sell one at a time, on hundred different days, does that mean you\’d have to pay DP charges 100 times?

when if you want you can buy shares.

NOW my question is suppose on a particular day

I sell off some shares from my \"HOLDINGS\" (as there is a sudden temporary spurt in prices by 11 AM).

Now those \"same\" shares slump by 3.30 PM.

I feel that tomorrow again there will be a spurt.

so, can i buy those \"SAME\" shares in the \"AFTER MARKET HOURS TRADING\"

(Without affecting / Neutralising my Earlier SELLING done at about 11 AM.)

IS \"BUYING\" done in \"AFTER MARKET HOURS TRADING \" considered as a \"TOTALLY\" separate EVENT ??????

Kindly CLARIFY,

so that we know whether to \"DO it\" OR NO.

IF IT AFFECTS /Neutralises earlier SELLING. Then Obviously we will not do this AFTER MARKET HOURS TRADING.

It could so happen that the seller could have defaulted. In such cases, you will get back your cash with up to 20% premium or you will get the delivery of shares with 1-day delay.

Reply981.  mohit says:June 26, 2019 at 6:48 pm in intraday trading the shares don't actually hit your demat account the same day but you can sell those shares? are there any risks involved in doing so? is this perfectly legal? can there be the case when i sold certain shares without having them in my demat account and the shares not being credited to me for any reason?if so, then what will be the penalty?

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:

June 27, 2019 at 11:11 am

Mohit, yes its certainly legal, no problem with that. However, the problem is that at time, due to the lack of liquidity you may not be able to buy back the shares (in case of short trades), then you will have an issue.

Hello Kartik,

I had eclerx stocks which i sold 1 day after the ex buyback date, i.e on the record date(10th may 2019) itself. I really do hope that i am eligible to participate in the buyback (in the retail quota).Kindly confirm ! Another question related to the same topic is that when the record date for a certain corporate action is given , then one should have the stocks in the DEMAT on the start of the day of the record date or by the end of the day of the record date?As in this case i was carrying the Eclerx shares in my DEMAT on the morning of record date (10 may) but sold in at around 10:30 am .

Hello,
Suppose I purchased the stocks yesterday (Say at 100/share) and sold today with 300rs profit then the stock price increased to (105/share). Now it is showing in position as negative -500 as a potential profit I would have earned. Thinking that the price again will go up, I exited from the position with current price and I bought back the stock at 105. Now in my Holdings it showing initial buying price (100) and profit as 800 INR. I am confused in this, I sold the stock at 100 and bought back at 105, shouldnt it show 105/stock as the price in my holdings and as per that price and profit as per second purchase price? or Is it canceling my earlier transaction and letting me retain my shares. Hi Nakul, i have checked all the article and understood that how it works.

But if i traded shared as intraday, in which some are holding too in my profile.

For EG: TATA motors 14 share holding on 183.50

Sold on 186.

on the same day of selling i bought 10 share in 195.5.

Next day the average cost for that 10 share is 183.5.

i want not able to understand that why it was so. if share cost is 195.5 then why its average cost showing 183.5.(what about the difference in amount i bought and average cost?

sir

I have found a bug/glitch

but i am not sure that it always happen ..

the thing is ...

if the mkt price of tata steel is 507 and we place a buy(limit) order at 525 .

then the order should remain open or must get rejected but it is executing at mkt price.

same thing happens with navel.

but with vedanta it does n\`t happens .

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:

That is because the system will try and get you the best possible price. Here you are telling the system that you want to buy at 525 (buy limit), but the price is lesser i.e 507, hence the order will go through.

sir

thankyou for response ,

(the system will try and get you the best possible price) // IT\'s OK but,

how system can change the price of order execution on its own (from 525 to 507).

coz , if i do the same for vedanta the system rejects the order ,rather than changing the price of execution on its own.

Assume that I have already 100 shares of HUL bought for cash showing in my dmat since a month.

today I buy 100 more for CASH to take benefit of downtrend. and hoping for an uptrend very shortly.

Then suddenly there is a spurt in prices on the same day that i purchased.

I see big profit ONLY in shares bought today and is showing in the POSITIONS.

Now if i sell from positions.

will they get sold...

OR

the 100 shares i bought a month back and which are still at a LOSS will get sold. ??

please clarify as this can happen many times..

Hello Guys,

I am new in this market. Its my third day of trading Thursday, Friday and Monday.

I have some questions

1) I am continuously buying and selling small stocks with QUANTITY Like i buy 10 stocks per stock cost is 7 rupees selling them 7.1 And i am continuously selling or purchasing the stock. Can this create any problems?

2) I am seeing the Zerodha brokerage charges But I am not clarify with the DP Charges. How DP charges calculate and Can DP charges apply on each stock Because right now i am not getting money but i don't lose money in DP charges.

3) Again charges – If i buy 1 stock of company at 5 rupees and same i buy other stocks Can DP charges apply on each stocks.

4) I buy 3 stocks in 318 rupees and selling them 321 I calculate the intraday charges .I earned 8.69 rupees all tax includes in it.

Can any other charges apply on it.

5) I am buying mostly CNC stocks if i am not selling them same day and How much time they carry in holding and also can brokerage charges high on Holding stocks?

I have also many question if someone explain me i am discuss more problems with that .

Thanks

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:
November 19, 2018 at 12:01 pm

1) No, there is no problem. If these are intraday trades, ensure you have squared off the positions by EOD

2) DP charge is Rs 15.93/- (inclusive of 18% GST). This is applicable on a scrip basis when you sell from your DEMAT account, even if you sell 1000 shares of a single company the charge is 15.93

3) As I mentioned, it applicable on a scrip basis. So you will pay 15.93*2

4) All charges are explained here – <https://zerodha.com/brokerage-calculator>

5) Brokerage is 0 with Zerodha but other brokers still charge quite a bit

Q3) if i buy stock today sell tomorrow Can Dp charges apply on it as well.

■ Karthik Rangappa says:

November 20, 2018 at 11:07 am

1) You can hold the shares for however long you want. DP charges are applicable only upon the sale of securities.

2) No. Its applicable only when you sell shares from DEMAT account

3) No, because the shares are not in DEMAT yet on T+1.

If I purchase 100@900rs per shares on 10/June/2018 and sell it after 10 days 100 shares in 10orders of rs903 per share on what basis I have to pay dp charges whether on scrip or on number of orders of that scrip

As long as you sell it on the same day, you will pay DP charges on a per scrip basis. So you could have sold across 10 trades, DP will be charged on a per scrip basis.

Hello Karthik,

Please help me.

My interest is in investing long term. Say 10-15 years.

Suppose I want buy 100 shares of HDFC Bank and keep them for long as I said.

1. What option I should use.. Is it CNC or Delivery trade? I'm confused

2. Suppose after that I no longer interested in investing for some five years. Should I keep demat account active?

Thanks in advance

If you buy today and sell tomorrow (and assuming you don't have the same in your DEMAT), then DP charges wont be charged. If you shares in your DEMAT, then we debit the shares, hence DP charges will be applicable.

hi,

What if Stock buy under CNC and sell same day. What will be the charges/penalty what if stock buy under CNC and want to sell very next day/T+1 day. What is the procedure. (stock not shown in holdings) how to sell. what will be the charges

Thanks

Karthik Rangappa says:

September 7, 2017 at 10:49 am

It will be considered as an intraday trade. If you sell it the next day, it will be considered a BTST trade....for this simply select the stock and sell the same number of qty under CNC. Charges would be 20 per executed order.

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
June 22, 2018 at 6:18 am

We don't charge brokerage for BTST trades, Sudha. However, if you do CNC trade within the same day, then it is considered intraday, hence brokerage is applicable.

On monday they have squared off the position. when I complained to them they replied that they have sent a mail to pay the margin before 2.30pm friday. (time not mentioned in sms) also that I have transferred to cash section and not F&O. I have suffered a loss of 82k. Is it right on their part or can I complain to SEBI? Please explain. Thanking you Sunil, I'm really not sure how MOSL functions. I'm guessing they have 2 ledgers here – one for cash and the other for F&O. Given this, ideally, you should have known this and transferred to F&O segment to ensure you carry the position forward. But, please do double check with them again.

Btw, at Zerodha we have a single ledger to for this (with 2 segments). So a client need not have to break his head over fund transfer to the specific ledger.

2. Depository guidelines do not allow a demat account to be opened in the name of a partnership firm, it should be opened in the name of a partner. As such, the name appearing was that of the partner, we've made changes so as to ensure that the firm's name shows up.

The share will be debited to your account on Wednesday evening. So you can sell them on Wednesday. If you want to be very safe, then check for them in your DEMAT account on Thursday morning and sell it on Thursday.

Hi, I have a small doubt. Please clarify it?
For example

Delivery
4/4/2018
Reliance communication
Bought price 23rs
1000 quantity

5/4/2018
On 5/4/2018 price is 25Rs
If I selling share on 5/4/2018

- 1) Think that if I sell share if it is showing t+1(what will happen) or can I sell it
- 2) Think that if I sell share if it is showing t+2 (what will happen) or can I sell it

Should I wait for t+1 and t+2
Any charges or penalty or auction for selling on t1 and t2

Pramod, you can sell on T+1 but there is always the risk of the auction. Check this –

Alternatively, you can sell this on T+2.

Hi,

I am sorry to ask you a query here. I have an account with you. I just have one question. When I contacted your branch officer regarding the brokerage, she told me that it's better for me to have an account in HDFC bank because while buying any stocks from Zerodha the brokerage will be nil but when you are selling the stock then at that time you will have to pay the brokerage of that particular account while selling. She said since Zerodha has an account in HDFC then you won't be charged any brokerage on the selling side. I did this two years back, I opened an account in HDFC bank. Lol! One of my friends wants to open an account in Zerodha, I just want to know does this rule still applies? My friend has an account in "SBI".

Reply

Shrenik, this is absolutely absurd. Our pricing is clearly mentioned here –
<https://zerodha.com/pricing>. Here is the list of all charges applicable –
<https://zerodha.com/charges>

Please note, there is no brokerage for buying and selling of Equities (as long as you are not doing this intraday). Can you please share the details of the branch and the contract person you spoke to?

If your friend has an Aadhar number, then please ask your friend to open his account online with us – <https://zerodha.com/open-account>.

I am in the process of starting an Trading account with you but I am familiar with online trading. Following are my queries

1. Is there any minimum brokerage charge for a Day. ? (ie. Due to some reasons I have only 2 transactions of Rs. 10000 each for the day. Brokerage would be $10000 * 2 * .01\% = \text{Rs. } 2$ only. Will you charge me Rs. 2 + taxes or more)?

2: If you are executing the automatic square off at the end of day(Intraday) , is there any extra charges for that?. If yes how much

3. Suppose I have a credit balance of Rs 20000 with you and at 10.30 am I sell stocks worth Rs. 12000 from my Demat account and at 11.50 can I buy Delivery based stock worth Rs. 26000. Is the vice versa possible. (ie. I buy at 10.30 am and sell another stock from my demat at 11.50 am)

Reply

◦  Karthik Rangappa says:
March 31, 2018 at 8:36 am

I'm assuming you are starting to trade with Zerodha –

1) No, the brokerage is Rs.20 per trade for intraday. No brokerage for delivery trades

2) Yes, ideally you are supposed to square off the position yourself, but in case you cannot (and you've opted for a MIS/BO/CO) order, then an additional charge of Rs.20 is applicable

3) After selling stocks worth 12K, you can buy for $20K + 12K = 32K$ so you can go ahead and do this.

My point is shares will get credit after T+2 days near around 11am. Within trading day and in between T+2 day if Reliance price trading high at 1050, do Zerodha will charge more for this transaction? Which price will it take my initial 1000 price or the new 1050 price.

1) You will get it the same day, which you can withdraw the next day
2) The profit will not get multiple, rather the amount with which you can buy gets multiplied.
For example, if you have 100/-, then with 14x leverage, you can buy for 1400. By virtue of this, your profit (or loss) will also multiple.

I have a profit of Rs. 9.96 in Intraday. I have a profit of 9.99 in Delivery.
But i read above that there are "DP" charges of 13.5 rs as well.

Hi

I had 10667 cash balance . Today I bought 10700 nifty pe at 49.8 premium and sold it at 51.8, thereby making a profit of Rs 150, which is showing green coloured 150 correctly. But my funds show (Free Cash 10665.5), (Margin Used -150) and (Total Value 10515.5). I believe the total value should be $10665.5 + 150$ instead of $10665.5 - 150$.

So it should be $10665.5 + 150 = 10815.5$ But it is showing as if I made a loss of Rs 150.

The P&L is adjusted at the end of the day when the trade process is run. If margin used is shown as negative, that's funds receivable and if positive, funds payable by you.

Hi,

Zerodha has a requirement of 50% of stock margin used for F&O to be kept in cash. Is this a requirement of SEBI or the exchanges ?

It does not look like that because other brokerages like ICICIDirect do not have this requirement. I can utilize 100% of my stock margin for F&O without having to keep any cash.

Thanks.

Reply

next day when I logged in to check my balance I could see my balance reduced to 4939 (margin available) instead of (5k + 218 profit).

can you please explain me how can I check where my money profit went? which are all the factors I should check?

2. Also I received a contract by mail in which I could see (Amount receivable by client/payable by client : 49.64).

Few more queries.

I have gone through the charges list for zerodha, still there are few queries

1. What are the order cancellation charges (if any).

2. Are there any charges on modifying the orders ?

3. Can transaction charges + other charges be more than profit earned ? (everyday I am having profit of around Rs 200 but amount is getting debited from my trading account at the end of every day. Why ?)

Reply

Amey says:

December 21, 2017 at 11:08 am

In addition to this,

Everyday I can see stamp duty of Rs 50 in my every contract note. Why it is so high?

So overall everyday even earning Rs 200 profit I have a loss of 250+ (only deductions happens. No credit) even I have observed that for this amount of profit brokerage charges are also ~80 Rs. !!!! which is quite high.

Are there any internal clauses which are not disclosed to us ? because of which we are facing so much losses day by day ?

Is anything going wrong ?

2. in the contract notes I can see that "Amount receivable by client/(payable by client) to be positive.

does this field indicates amount to be credited/ debited In my account? It should be positive or negative ?

Hi,

If I hold 100 shares in my demat account and one day I sold same quantity and again purchased on same day. My initial buy price 100. My sell Price 150. My second buy price on same day 160. So here should I have to pay capital gain tax 15% for my profit of $100 * 50$? As i sold and purchase on same day my avg price is still will be shown as 100. I am aware that settlement will be happen between my sell and purchase of same and I will incur a loss of $100 * (160-150)$ which will be debited from my account (I think so). So I am not very clear on tax part. Can you please explain ? All transactions are within a year.

Reply

o Venu Madhav says:

December 20, 2017 at 11:51 am

When you buy & sell stocks the same day, they have no bearing on the stocks held in your demat account. The trade is considered an intraday trade and as per section 43(5) of the Income Tax Act, 1961, profits earned by trading equity or stocks for intraday or non-delivery is categorized under speculative business income.

There is no fixed rate like capital gains tax rate when you have a business income. If you have a business income, it has to be added to the rest of your other income and tax has to be paid as per the tax slab you fall in.

I was doing this buy and sell of same day since few days by maintaining my initial buy price as same but getting advantage of price variations. But now I am worried that my every time when I sell I may end up with paying taxes on profits (which is more than 50K in my case).

Hi Karthik,

To summarize Venkat's point, CNC can be used for both Intraday and Delivery. If we choose CNC and sell it on

T day – it is Intraday (Brokerage:Yes)

T+1 – It is BTST(Brokerage:Yes)

>T+2 – It is delivery.(Brokerage:No)

If we choose MIS, trade is valid only for Intraday. Is my understanding correct?

In Zerodha ZConnect, I have read a point that we cannot sell CNC until it is available as holdings.

Now:

1. When will profit P1 will be shown as realized profit? means when will I have that profit added to the account value?
2. The paper profit for the second CNC is being shown based on average price of both the buy trades on the "position page" on Kite. Should it not be showing the paper profit based on the buying price of the second trade only as I have already sold the first stock bought earlier?

When you choose to sell from your Holdings, it will sell in NSE.

To sell in BSE, add the BSE scrip into your marketwatch(Eg. \”Infy BSE\”). Place a CNC sell order from the Marketwatch(not from holdings). The order will route through BSE

Hello sir,

I downloaded my Profit & Loss Statement from Q Zerodha which shows that I have gained profit but in actual my initial funds are less than what i transferred. Is it due to DP charges as your P&L does not show any DP charges.

Please provide me details – how much DP charges are charged on how much quantity and amount of transaction.

Is there any tip for DP charges while doing intra day that you would like to suggest me.

We allow pledging of shares, which all release additional margins for you to trade. You can opt for this. This is essentially what your previous broker does.

i thought stock is debited from demat-account on T2-day and then demat-charge is taken from client.

i have cnc 15 shares of xyz in my account [7days old purchase], now i sold cnc 5 on 28 nov [T], on 29 nov i buy cnc 5 shares [T1-so no debit from demat-account should be done?

but on 29 nov evening sms from cdsi says= \" 5qty of xyx debited from you account\"

why this is so, why debit done on T1 day? and does it means demat-charge of 15rs will also be levied?

Okay,

So in my contract note, there is a head under which the charge is deducted from my account.

This is called \"Taxable value of supply(brokerage)\" and there is an amount listed against it, which is 0.01 or so sometimes.

What is this amount? Is it brokerage or is it the tax, as is mentioned?

If it is a tax on the brokerage, is the brokerage taxable?

Reply

-  Faisal Mohammed says:

Taxable value of supply(brokerage) is basically the brokerage charged for the trades done. For Equity Delivery trades, we charge zero brokerage, hence, a token 1 paise charge is billed in the Contract Note.

Securities Transaction Tax is charged by the government when transacting on the exchanges. Please refer to List of Charges for more information on STT and other charges.

I have buy 400 shares of grauweil of BSE @ 70.75 and sell out at 71.8 in intraday on 24 Novemeber 2017. According to calculator total deductions including brokerage charges are Rs 18 approx but in real zerodha have deducted around Rs 83 for brokerage. Trade is done in 3 parts in buying and 1 part in selling so exchange transaction charges would be Rs 6 instead of Rs 3 which is shown in calculator. Stamp duty is Rs 1.14 which is not shown in calculator. This problem is only facing by me in BSE scrips. Nothing wrong with NSE brokerage from calculator. Kindly tell me the reason that why Zerodha is deducting more charges for BSE scrips than shown in your calculator for Intraday. This is the second time in this week when i have face this problem. Kindly give me the reason. It might be possibility that there might be some additional charge for BSE scrips which i do not know. In this case, kindly tell me about additional charge if any and tell me how the deduction for this order can become 83

I just want to share one situation that has happened with me today 23.11.2017. Please answer the following points.

- 1) I wanted to buy ARROW Greentech on intraday basis but RMS did not allow me.
- 2) The brokerage on Delivery in SBICAP is 0.5% and the Brokerage on ZERODHA is 0.1% or Rs 20 whichever is lower on delivery then my question is if i would have bought the 8K Miles @ Rs 810 and sold it on the same day as delivery basis share @Rs 865 what would be my profit using ZERODHA Vs SBICAP.
- 3) If the delivery brokerage is at such a low level in ZERODHA then instead of doing Intraday why is it not advisable to use delivery trade to book maximum profit?

November 7, 2017 at 9:28 pm

Dear sir Thanks for such a lucid explanation

Can you please clarify my understanding on intraday trading?

Right now I am not sure which one of these is happening for intraday trading

1) Whenever X is buying a share in intraday trade, there should be always someone who is Y shorting in intraday trade for the transaction or trade to complete. If that is the case, Y need to buy the share by end of day 03:20pm which means some Z has to short it which seems never ending process.

or

2) It works like zero-sum game like in future trading with underlying asset as equity. So when X is buying a share in intraday trade it is like buying contract/agreement which should be sold by end of the day and at same time someone Y is selling contract which should be bought by end of the day. So by end of the day they will be squared – off or they can transfer risk during day with another person.

How does intraday trading works?

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
November 8, 2017 at 11:20 am

1) Y can be a regular seller – selling shares from him DEMAT

2) Not really – like I said the seller or buyer could be operating in delivery mode as well.

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:

The settlement is very straightforward, Mahesh. Lets say I buy 10 shares @ 200 and sell 10 shares @ 205, my profit is Rs.5 per share or Rs.50. Out of the Rs.50 profits, I will have to pay my charges, and after which, whatever is left will be my profit for the day.

Avi, Futures(long and short) and Options(shorting) have a Mark to Market Settlement wherein Day\’s change margin is added/removed from your trading balance. You can read about the same in this chapter.

However, for Option buying, the amount is debited once you buy the Option contract(Rs 31,200 in this case) and the funds will be released only if you choose to sell them. There is no Daily MtoM settlement when you buy Option contracts.

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
October 29, 2017 at 11:10 am

This is the case of buying a call option, which requires you to pay 100% premium upfront. Just like how you’d buy a stock. So end of the day, the value of the option that you are holding goes down. Apart from this, there is no settlement here...unless you decide to sell the option.

Short sell orders are available for stocks in this list and are required to be placed under MIS type.
Please contact Support for any other rejection issues

When i checked my account in next day... it showed only Rs.5,212.56/-. Why? In one of your answers to clients you said the profit will be credited to your account after deducting everything. In my case i dont understand what happened...? In a day i.e. from 9.15AM to 3.15PM during the period how many times i can do intraday trading... is there any restrictions for that....for each trading you will charge your Rs.20 brokerage charges...? please explain as I am new to this field. Thanks and Regards. M S Giri Babu

No, there is no restriction on the number of times you can do intraday trading. However, overtrading is not a great thing for the longevity of a trader. The brokerage will be Rs.20 for each executed order.

If a contract note has several buy/sell trades in a scrip, resulting in both square-off and delivery, then how can I determine which trade has incurred delivery brokerage and which has incurred intraday brokerage? Zerodha's contract note does not separately mention brokerage per trade nor does it identify a trade as delivery or jobbing.

Reply

- o  Faisal Mohammed says:
October 15, 2017 at 11:20 am

We are soon introducing a new contract note format which contains the break-up of the brokerage charged for each trade.

Previously, you had to manually calculate the same.

In all cases, the brokerage is charged only if there is a net buy and sell in a day. Otherwise it is treated as Delivery (Zero brokerage).

For taxation purposes, the Tax P&L statement makes the differentiation of your trades under Speculation, Short term and Long term

Reply

-  Gaurav says:
October 15, 2017 at 12:06 pm

I noticed, as with other brokerages, in Zerodha it is FIFO employed for distinguishing jobbing and delivery trades. My confusion was because trades downloaded in Excel format consolidate as per Trade No.. However, contract note divides a Trade No. as necessary for square-off and delivery.

It will be helpful if there is option to get contract note in HTML or spreadsheet format. As such, a client can easily copy-paste data in Excel and do calculations, instead of first downloading trades in xls and then calculating and checking with figures in pdf contract note.

Hi,

I am extremely thankful to you for clarifying my queries within no time.

I got a surprising knowledge today.

I never read it anywhere in your manual or saw in your youtube videos. Got this from this youtube video (Link: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=VazR-zifYEE> Time 5.40)

It is said that after buying a stock in CNC it can be sold on the same day in CNC. I read in your manual that delivery based purchase can be sold only once the stock gets credited to your account. Otherwise, it will be treated as BTST with its own risks.

Could you please throw some light on buying and selling on the same day in CNC segment? Also please tell me what would be the charges for doing so?

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
October 15, 2017 at 10:53 am

Nancy, if you buy and sell the stock on the same day (although bought under CNC), it will be considered as an intraday trade and charged accordingly. However, to do BTST, you need to buy under CNC.

Reply

-  Nancy says:
October 15, 2017 at 2:58 pm

Please clarify whether my understanding is right.

CASE 1:

I buy a stock in CNC with the intent of taking delivery. Suddenly I see a tremendous upward movement in the stock on the same day and would like to take advantage of it. So I sell it in the CNC segment. Then this will be considered as an intraday transaction. Intraday brokerage charges would apply.

1. What would be the STT percentage? 0.1% on buy & sell (CNC charges) or 0.025% on the sell side only (Intraday charges)

CASE 2:

I buy a stock in CNC with the intent of taking delivery. I see a sudden increase in the stock price on the next day. So I need to sell it in BTST right. BTST has certain risks.

CASE 3:

I buy a stock in CNC with the intent of taking delivery. I see a sudden increase in the stock price on the second day. If I want to sell the shares what should I do?

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
October 16, 2017 at 11:08 am

Check this – <https://zerodha.com/charges>

- 1) It would be on the sell side
- 2) Yes, that would be BTST and BTST comes with its set of risks. Check this – <https://zerodha.com/z-connect/queries/stock-and-fo-queries/btstatst-buyacquire-today-sell-tomorrow>
- 3) Same as above.

This is the case where the seller has defaulted on his obligation. The email sent will have necessary details. You will either get the delivery of stocks or the funds will be credited. Cut off date will be mentioned in the email. In most cases, you will get the credit of stocks. In case stock credit does not happen, then you will get cash + 20% (at the most) credited to your account.

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
October 12, 2017 at 8:43 am

I'm assuming that you've sold the shares from the holdings. Positions just reflect the intraday position. So when you sell the stock from holdings, the system understands this as an intraday position and therefore starts tracking the P&L (this is -2 and +10 you are talking about). However, end of the day this gets cleared and your stocks are flushed out of the the DP to meet the exchange obligation.

Hi,

I have a query regarding multiple trades in a day that include both delivery and intraday trading.

Example: Day 1 – I already have 500 units of Stock A in my demat account. Lets give it a name Trade1.

Day 2 – First I sold 500 units and then I bought 500 units of Stock A. Lets give them name as Trade2 (S) and Trade3 (B) respectively.

Question: How trade will get settled. I got two answers upon calling zerodha support number.

Ans1 – Trade2 abd Trade3 will get settled (part of Intraday trades, P&L will be calculated), and nothing will happen to Trade1 (means 500 units will remain in account at same price as it was).

Ans2 – Trade1 and Trade2 get settled (according to FIFO). Means existing 500 units gets sold (P&L is calculated). Trade 3 (B) will get credited in demat account (as part of delivery). After that 500 units of Trade3 will reflect in account with new Avg price on which they were bought.

I am confused. Please help.

Reply

o Karthik Rangappa says:

September 8, 2017 at 1:45 pm

1 is correct. Trades made on day 2 – trade2 & trade3 will get knocked off and trade1 will result in delivery.

So is zerodha going to get dp charges for every day?

From the above situation i got a profit of say 4 rupees. So first day 4 rupees second day 4 rupees.

DP charges will be 15+15 30 rupees. So i lost around 26 rupees.

If I buy reliance shares 100 quantity at 1000 rs, ie total $100 * 1000$ RS deducted for can transaction. Now on the very next day the share is trading at 980 RS so I sell 100 quantity at 980 and on the same day I again buy at 960 all transactions in can. So basically here I have made a profit of $20 * 100$, but this profit is not added to my funds not the average purchase price of my reliance share which was 1000 is corrected to new average, so where this profit goes. I have done such transaction and my scrip shows old purchase price in back-office and the profit was not even added to my funds on the same day.

 Now, I want to buy back those 20 shares again from my POSITION, so my holding should reflect 50 shares isn't it?
 but, it is reflecting 20 in my HOLDING. Could you please help me on understanding whether I'm wrong or there could be a discrepancy in the no. of shares it's displaying.

When you sell the shares from holdings, the shares are marked out from your demat account and hence it will show as -20 in your positions page. If you buy these shares again, then 20 will show as T1 quantity the next day and will eventually show up in your holdings on T+2 day basis.

Correction to what Karthik's said: When you've sold 20 of the 50 shares, your position would show -20. If you buy it back during the day, it would become an Intraday trade and your holding of 50 would remain intact.

Hi, If I buy a share of particular company using CNC mode today i.e. on 17th July 2017 and Sell it on same day i.e. today i.e. on 17th July 2017, then it will become Intraday. then again if I buy shares of the same company today i.e. on 17th July 2017 using CNC option and if I don't sell it today. will my second-time purchase of same company today considered as Intraday or CNC?

It will be considered CNC and you will get delivery of the shares. The same will reflect in your DEMAT on a T+2 basis.

What are the other charges for buying in CNC, let say I am doing a trading in a CNC mode like Buying shares and selling on T+2 days.

as the charges will be like mentioned in <https://zerodha.com/brokerage-calculator> and 13 rupees for each script every time selling.

- 1) will their be any other outstanding charges? and where can I SEE outstanding charges?
2. are there any other hidden/govt charges which we need to pay for selling the stocks at end of year/closing the account.
3. lets say If I buy and sell on T+2 for particular stock throughout the year, will there be any other charges BECAUSE I am buying an selling from only ONE particular stock vendor?
4. In short, what I think for not to worry about charges is, if I invest 40,000 rupees and if I continue to sell entire stocks at 2% profit after T+2 day then I will be in profits only.

Please answer this 4 questions

Reply

- 1) No outstanding charges as such.

- 4) Yes, you will be profitable. However, please check the charge list exact charges.

Hi karthik,

I am facing a problem regarding selling a share, last week I bought two shares of NMDC in CNC format and today I tried to square off my position by selling it. but, after selling the share I see that in my 'position' tab NMDC is in short position(it was showing that, I have short sell NMDC).

After that I buy the shares again to stop my losses but they again appear in my holding.

I called in your support center for this problem and they assured me that there are no problem happening, my stock has been sold successfully. Even I was told that share would be automatically transferred from my demat account.

but till now I have those stocks in my holding.

please help me.

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:
June 6, 2017 at 11:15 pm

When you sell shares from your DEMAT, the positions tab will reflect this as a short position. This is because the position tab is meant to show your positions for the day. So ideally, you should have left it at that and the shares would have been flushed out. However, since you bought it back, original sell and the eventual buy back resulted in an intraday trade, and your original shares in DEMAT stayed intact, hence you see the same in your holdings.

Do you recollect whom you spoke to?

Hi, I have a doubt regarding intraday trading. You said the stocks comes in the demat account on T+3 day. But if I do a NRML or MIS trade will there still be risk bcz of not having the stocks in demat. I read the previous comments and you said MIS and NRML trades are settled same day is it mean that there is no T+1 and T+2 day involved in NRML and MIS orders and hence the risk is associated only when my buy order is CNC and still I sell the stocks before they have reached to my account?

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:

June 6, 2017 at 10:24 am

If you buy stocks today, then the stocks will hit your DEMAT on T+2 basis, not T+3. If I've stated T+3, then please do ignore that. MIS orders are intraday trades and will be squared off by EOD. However, the risk of shorting in MIS is getting a bad delivery. Please do read more about it here – <https://zerodha.com/z-connect/queries/stock-and-fo-queries/consequences-of-short-delivery-nse-bse>

Reply

■  Gagandeep says:
June 6, 2017 at 9:51 pm

Thank you for replying, but i was not asking about shorting the stocks. Actually I was talking about this,
 \”The day after you made the transaction is called the T+1 day. On T+1 day you can sell the stock that you purchased the previous day. If you do so, you are basically doing a quick trade called “Buy Today, Sell Tomorrow” (BTST) or “Acquire Today, Sell Tomorrow” (ATST). Remember the stock is not in your DEMAT account yet. Hence, there is a risk involved, and you could be in trouble for selling a stock that you don’t really own. This doesn’t mean, every time you do a BTST trade you end up in trouble, but it does once in a way especially when you trade B group and illiquid stocks. The reason why this happens is a little convoluted, and we deliberately will not touch this topic now.\”
 Is this thing applicable to Intraday. What does squaring off position really means, is it like when we do MIS order the whole process of transferring the shares from another persons demat account to my demat does not because at last the position is going to be squared off by EOD?
 If I am still not clear I can elaborate.

Reply

■  Karthik Rangappa says:
June 6, 2017 at 11:11 pm

Squaring off a position means that you are closing or netting off an existent position. For example I have bought 100 shares of Infosys, squaring off this position means I sell the existing 100 shares of Infy. So, when you do intraday (by means of MIS orders), you are squaring off all your positions and getting out of market, so there is no risk as such.

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:

You can basically do 3 types of trade –

- 1) Intraday – where you buy and sell during the day and do not take any positions overnight. For such trades, T+2 is not applicable.
- 2) Delivery trades – You buy positions with an expectation of holding the position for few days. In such a situation, you need to wait for T+2 for the stocks to hit your DEMAT
- 3) F&O – These are in futures and options, no need to worry about T+2

Hi Karthik,

If the price of a share is rs 100 on T day (when I place the buy order) and rs 102 on t+2 day (when stock comes into my DEMAT account), what is the buying price for this transaction.

Reply

It will be the price at which you bought the share, 100 in this case.

Yes, you can. Not a problem. However, make sure you are not doing this on stocks in 'BE/BZ' segment (NSE) 'T, XT, Z' on BSE...also referred to as 'Trade to Trade' segment.

Stocks which fall under this category has to be taken in for delivery. You cannot do intraday trade on them.

I sell shares worth Rs 1,00,000 (Rs one lakh) from my holdings.(after T3)

I can see that INSTANTLY on completion of SALE....Rs one lakh.. starts showing in my ACCOUNT BALANCE.

My question is.. if I Immediately buy SOME OTHER SHARES....worth about Rs one lakh including statutory charges.

Then...is there any CHARGES.. which will be applicable by zerodha ..to use this Rs one lakh Sinxe I understand that. YOU as a broker will get this SALE PROCEEDS.. ..only after T2 days. please explain the charges if applicable.

Ideally if you have 1lakh in your account, you should buy shares for an amount slightly lesser than for 1L. For example for say 99,875 and buffer some money for other STT and other charges. These charges wont be more than 110 if you are trading with us. Remember, Zerodha does not charge you a brokerage for EQ deliver trades. A DEMAT account is like a bank account. Just like how a bank account holds your cash, the DEMAT account holds your shares (in digital format). In order to buy the shares in your DEMAT account, you will need a trading account.

DP charges are similar to bank charges. The rates are as below –

Rs 8 (Zerodha) plus Rs. 5.5 (CDSL) (applicable only when you are selling your Delivery position after having held for more than two days). (Market rates are usually between Rs 12 to Rs 25) STT, Service Tax, NSE Turnover and Transaction Charges, SEBI charges are all as applicable market-wide.

Hi Karthik,
I have a clarification, which i require from your end. I recently sold some shares of a company which had announced a bonus issue on the ex-date. Does zerodha debit my DP account on the same day, and transfer to a pool account, before giving settlement. If so this would deprive me from credit of bonus shares shares.

I have come to this conclusion after a detailed discussion with the Registrar and Company Secretary at the said company. And the CS has suggested that some brokers do follow this procedure.

Below is an excerpt of my conversation
\"Some brokers have the tendency to debit the account on same day (Ex -date) and kept the share in their poll account and transfer later on to the buyer.\"

Your inputs in this regard would be highly appreciated.

Thanks and Regards
Prasanna

If I am holding 10 stocks of Infy on T+1 day and if I decide to buy and sell the stocks 3-4 times on that day (due to lack of margin to buy a fresh lot to trade) to profit from price volatility (ensuring that I buy back all 10 shares before end of day), do I run a risk of BTST auction?

– On same day (then it will be considered intraday? MIS?)

-or, if didnt sell on same day, then only after T+2. i.e T+3 ??

Am i right ? Ideally, a share holded till end of day should be carried forward for two more days until u can sell.?

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:

June 28, 2016 at 11:55 am

Intra day settlement is quite straightforward. Suppose you buy 200 shares at 50 and sell the same at 52, then you make $2 \times 200 = 400$. Out of this you deduct brokerage and other charges and the balance is what you take home. You can use Zerodha's brokerage calculator to get the exact breakdown of charges – <https://zerodha.com/brokerage-calculator>

By the way, Which broker are you trading with ?

Hi Karthik,

1. How to do I execute the order of short deliver trading (“CNC”?!!) based on SLBS (Securities Lending and Borrowing Scheme) and what is the charges levies for this?

2. I know that, we can convert the product type "MIS" to CNC. Then, could I convert to "CNC" to "MIS" also?
3. If the opportunity arise after my execution of the stock in "CNC" product type. Then, I keen to sell and book the profit. In this case, I put sell order as "CNC" otherwise convert my buy order to "MIS" and then put sell order as "MIS".
4. If I've Rs.22,560 in my trading account balance. I've buy the xyz stock @Rs.96 quantity of 120 ($96 \times 120 =$ (Margin Used) Rs.11,520 [Free Cash Balance = Rs.11,040]) in "CNC" product type at Monday (29/02/2016 10:50 AM). Then, I've sell the xyz stock @120 quantity of 120 ($120 \times 120 =$ (Margin Used) Rs.14,400 [Free Cash Balance = Rs.11,040]) at Thursday after deliver (03/03/2016 12:25 PM). Then, Could I use the actual capital of buying stock amount Rs.11,520 (except profit Rs.2,880) for another trade on the same day after sell the stock in few minutes/seconds.

[I think, the profit amount Rs.2,880 use only after credit my trade account (T+2 Days). Am i right?]

And Because, I read on z-connect in margin policy article. The below statement is shown on there.

"This credit is available for you to trade intraday, but there might be a short margin penalty applicable if you carry forward positions using this non-realized profit."

Short margin penalty applicable on carry forward positions means. I use the Rs.11,520 for intraday only or another "CNC" trade also I use the amount on before the amount credit to my trading account.

5. I understand below thing. When, I notice the point on the Q-Back office. The first one is Available Balance & Withdrawal Balance.

(i) Available Balance is shown as instantly if I sell or square off the Stock/F&O contract.

(ii) Withdrawal Balance is only updated based on T+1 (MIS/NRML) or T+2 (CNC). it's depend upon the product type.

The above statement is correct. Please clarify my doubts.

Thanks in advance karthik.

2) Yes you can

3) If you have bought as CNC, sell it as CNC – as long as its done intraday, no need to worry about it

4) Yes, as soon as you sell, the entire sell value (including your profits) can be used to trading immediately. You will get this margin benefit right away. However I would suggest you cross check with our support executives once.

Why does it take two days to complete the whole transaction?
The transaction is completely electronical and hence it can happen in a few seconds. So, there must be a reason why our exchanges follow the T+2 format. What are the benefits of the system that we follow?

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:

All trades are cleared at a broker level by end of day, and the broker assigns this to the end client. Besides there is another process of debiting/crediting the DP account at CDSL or NSDL..also its not just the exchanges involved – exchanges, DP, clearing houses, brokers etc. Hence some delay!

You`d pay only Rs. 14 as your DP charges because you`re selling them on one day. If you sold these on two different days, you`d be paying DP charges for two different days.
If you sold two different scrips on the same day, you`d pay Rs. 14 x 2 (scrips) as your DP charges.

When is the 14 rs for DP charges incurred for Equity delivery (only during the sell trade?) .
 Does this go from the trading account or from the profit ? If sold at a loss what happens then ?
 Why is it not reflected in Brokerage calculator as it should be standard charge (or does it vary time to time ?)

Reply

o Hanan Delvi says:
January 20, 2016 at 6:24 am

Yes, you're right about this. Rs. 14 is charged only when you sell from your DP. The Rs. 14 is broken down as (Rs. 8 Zerodha, Rs. 5.5 CDSL and the rest as tax). All charges are debited directly from your trading account after T+2 settlement.

The reason it's not included in the brokerage calculator is because it is charged per scrip, not per trade. We have this information displayed on our detailed charge list available here:

Settlement Value = This is the Rupee value. For example if the settlement value is 2015216, it is Rs.2,015,216.0

Pending shares = If you have placed an order to buy 100 shares out of which you have both 30, the 70 will be pending shares

Holding shares = These are the shares present in you DEMAT account.

Hi Kartik,

Suppose I am starting intraday trading with 10k.

1) I bought shares for 100k using margin and sold the same after half an hour for 105k (I got very lucky :P)

Now, I have already used up the 10x leverage on my capital. Will I be able to do more trades on the same day? Or do I need to wait for the settlement EOD and can only trade next day?

Thanks,

Great! I started trading with Zerodha today 😊

I executed 2 short trades on 2 different scripts. Both the orders were executed. But, later when I tried to square off my order got rejected with a message that I don't have enough margin. Both the orders got squared off automatically at 3.20 and I made losses 😞
Why was my order got rejected then? I have been trading with another full time broker and never faced such an issue.

This scenario can arise when unequal margins are used for shorting and buyback. For example shorting with cover order and buyback with limit order may cause this problem since the leverage for both case is different.

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
July 21, 2017 at 6:21 am

Since BO/CO are intraday orders, margins are different.

-  Bhaskar says:
January 12, 2017 at 10:33 am

Just for the knowledge and information of other people. Sometimes this may happen due to machine error. It so happens that order may seem stuck and trader places another trade which shows confirmed. In this case opposite trade gets placed.

For example a short trade is placed and when trader tries to square off, two orders gets placed. First one is square off and second is a buy order and thus margins gets blocked and it may effect the whole trading process.

Although above may not be exact thing that happened above but if an order seems stuck one should check with admin position window for open positions and order window for confirmation of placed and executed orders. one should also place square-off orders from admin-position window and confirm with order window before trying to square off again. As this will create a fresh buy position as discussed above.

Hope it helps.

Also, check your contract notes and you will see what exactly happened.

Stock Price :XYZ @ 70
Amount in Trading ac: Rs. 50,000

If I want to buy the 100 share of xyz @70 at 11 am, then amount debited from my trading ac will be Rs.7000 instantly (Bal on trading ac will show Rs.43000).

At 11.30 am on the same day, if I sell 100 shares of xyz @ 71, then the amount Rs 7100 will be credited to my trading ac on EOD?. If so, would I be left with balance Rs. 43000 to commence my next trade?.

No, brokerage and taxes are deducted first, what is left after that makes up your P&L. Advantage of trading with Zerodha is that our brokerage is the lowest in the can you please explain me how can I check where my money profit went? which are all the factors I should check?

This is what i understand. Let me know if I am correct for intraday trading.

If i buy some 10 shares for price 100 each, then 10×100 is debited in my trading account.

Then after 2 hours, I sell the 5 shares for price 110.

1. How much money be credited to my acc instantly?

2. How much money be credited to my acc EOD?

If you have done this trade using MIS as the product code then even the other 5 shares that you didn't sell will be squared off. If you have bought the 10 share as CNC, then 5 shares will goto delivery and the other 5 will be squared off when you sold them @ 105.

- 1) You get a credit of 525 against the sale of 5 shares @ 105
- 2) You will be debited 5×100 from the purchase so 500

EOD you will have 505 minus all the applicable charges.

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
October 25, 2017 at 11:00 am

The day you buy the shares, that day is referred to as 'T' day. Next day is T1, next to next is T2. So shares bought on T gets delivered to your DEMAT on T2.

How does the intraday buy and sell work in this case? Does it mean in case of intraday trading we are essentially selling the shares that are not with us?

In case of there is a bank/DP holiday on T+2 day, will the shares still shown under T1 holdings?

Reply

- o  Suchetha says:
November 17, 2015 at 7:02 am

Yes. If there is a bank/DP holiday on T+2 day, the shares will still show up in the T1 holdings in day 1 and 2.

For example : If shares are bought on 8th November and 10th November is a settlement holiday, the shares will reflect in the T1 holdings on 9th and 10th November and the client can sell after the 13th November.

Hi Vijay, there is no brokerage for the sell transaction. However you will have to have to pay DP charges of Rs.13.5/- irrespective of the quantity sold. I'd suggest you take a look at this – <https://zerodha.com/charges>.

When you sell shares from DP.

-  Sumit Kumar Pandit says:
January 15, 2018 at 9:17 am

Hi Karthik,

I am confused about selling an instrument and settlement. Following is my understanding:

1. If we buy an equity today we can sell on the same day and it will be called intraday trade. In this trade the equity never actually hits the demat account but we only trade the price difference.
2. If we sell an equity on T+1 day, since buy orders are already sent to the exchange on T day-end, it is out of broker's control and cannot be treated as intraday. Also, equities don't hit demat on T+1 day and we sell equity that we don't yet own resulting in shorting.
3. This will lead to two different trades in portfolio viz., T day long trade and T+1 day short trade.
4. If we sell equity on T+2 or beyond, we essentially sell the equity that we own in our demat.
5. Regarding our profits, all profits are available only on the next day of settlement except for intraday which is made available on the same day end. And our T+1 trade was not a settlement at all.

Kindly correct if I am wrong in above understanding. Now following are my questions:

- A. Are these same rules applicable on futures/options also?
- B. Are futures/options being just contracts can be bought and sold anytime i.e., intraday, T+1 and T+2 and beyond?
- C. If they have different rules, please explain.

Thanks,
Sumit Kumar Pandit

- 1) Yes, this is correct
- 2) Yes, this is correct as well
- 3) This will be a BTST trade, suggest you read this – <https://zerodha.com/z-connect/queries/stock-and-fo-queries/btstatst-buyacquire-today-sell-tomorrow>
- 4) Yes, sell would be from DEMAT
- 5) Yes

A) The settlement is slightly different. I'd suggest you read the Futures module – <https://zerodha.com/varsity/module/futures-trading/>

B) Yes, these can be bought and sold anytime. Your holding period can be as small as 30 Seconds.

C) Please go through the module on derivatives.

Glad you liked it, Prateek. We have divided the derivative across 3 modules –

- 1) Futures – <https://zerodha.com/varsity/module/futures-trading/>
- 2) Options Theory – <https://zerodha.com/varsity/module/option-theory/>
- 3) Option Strategies – <https://zerodha.com/varsity/module/option-strategies/>

BO/CO is a part of the Futures module.

All applicable charges will be deducted, Avinash. You should buffer for this before buying Y to avoid any -ve balance in your trading account. Check this to know about all the charges – <https://zerodha.com/charges>

I have the same question.

- 1) If I sell "Stock/Bond/InvIT/FMP X" for Rs 1000 today, and want to buy "Company Y" shares the same day for Rs 950, is it possible, or do I have to wait for T+2 after the sale before I can buy with the Rs 1000?
 - 2) What if I have units worth Rs 1000 of Liquid Bees/ETF of Reliance/DSP? Do I have to sell the units before or after I buy "Company Y" stock? (I assume at least in this case I don't need to wait for T+2 before buying)
- Thanks in advance!

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
September 28, 2018 at 2:11 pm

- 1) We provide you credit to the extent of the shares sold on the same day. So you can buy Y shares the same day. But do account for the applicable charges
- 2) Its the same, you get credit to the extent of sale. So you can buy shares of Y the same day.
