The 20 Market Depth (level 3 data) Window

I've driven a car for many years and I've even changed my car a few times now. Each time I changed my car, the engine remained more or less the same, but the features within the vehicle and its aesthetics continuously changed. Air conditioner, power steering, and power windows were all luxury features in the car at one point, but today, I guess no one buys a car without these essential features. The game-changer for me though was parking assist. The little camera at the back of the car gave me complete visibility of the parking space available. I was no longer required to pop and twist my head out and struggle to park the car, nor did I have to bug my co-passenger to get down and help me navigate my way into a parking spot. The parking assist feature did everything and helped me execute a perfect parallel park. The parking assist feature was my edge for hassle-free car parking.

I feel the same edge while trading the markets with the level 3 data 😊

Level 3 or the 20 market depth feature is unique and has multiple uses. You'll probably appreciate the level 3 market window if you have traded at an institutional desk. A regular retail trader would not understand this feature anytime soon, simply because this feature was unavailable all these years until we introduced it for the very first time to the Indian retail traders.

The purpose of this chapter is to help you understand how useful this feature is and get you started on building trading strategies around this feature.

If you are entirely new to this, I'd suggest you read this blog to understand what the level 3 data is all about.

Assuming you know what it is, this chapter will help you understand the multiple uses of this feature.

Contract availability

For the option traders, the 20-depth order book gives great visibility into the availability of contracts to trade and help identify better price points to execute these trade. Without this visibility, it becomes really hard to trade illiquid contracts. While I'm specifically talking about options here, you can extend this to Futures contracts as well, especially the illiquid ones.

Let us put this in context, have a look at the regular market depth (i.e. the top 5 bid-ask) of the 13000 CE expiring in Jan 2020.

NIFTY 20JAN 13000 CE
			19.32 %	^	52.50

41.00	1	75	60.00	1	75
Total		50,100	Total		5,325
View 20 depth

We can see narrow bids on the left and a notch better offer on the right. You'd probably hesitate to trade this contract if you are someone looking at trading a few lots of Nifty.

But check what's hiding under the hood here by opening the level 3 data –

NIFTY 20JAN 13000 CE

22.25	1	600	0.00	0	0
Total		50,100	Total		5,325

As you can see, there are many contracts available, but they are not visible in the regular market depth. In fact, the bid and offer quantities are heavily concentrated below the 8th row respectively.

Given the availability of the contracts in this strike, the perspective to trade or not completely changes and will now depend upon your trading strategy.

Execution control

Level 3 data gives you full visibility of the approximate execution price for your trade. This is particularly useful when you decide to scalp the market. When you scalp the market —

- You trade large quantities, i.e. buy and sell large amounts in quick succession to profit from small tick moves in the stock
- Since these are quick trades, you place market orders only

Let us say you want to buy and sell 5000 shares of Hindustan Zinc; the regular market depth window gives you the following information —

HINDZINC

0.02 %  210.55

BID	ORDERS	QTY.	OFFER	ORDERS	QTY.
210.45	1	100	210.55	2	188

210.20	11	2871	210.80	1	5
Total		2,47,160	Total		2,98,649

 View 20 depth

As you can see, there is no visibility on how these 5000 shares will get filled. Now, take a look at the 20 depth window —

HINDZINC

0.00 %  210.50

BID	ORDERS	QTY.	OFFER	ORDERS	QTY.
210.45	1	100	210.50	3	145

210.10	10	402	211.00	2	2425
210.05	7	1165	211.05	2	200
210.00	116	7359	211.10	2	200

209.85	2	1294	211.20	1	100
209.80	3	41	211.25	2	1100
209.75	1	25	211.30	2	1100
209.70	3	59	211.35	3	1418
209.65	4	1256	211.50	3	203
209.60	2	155	211.55	2	1265

209.50	10	809	211.70	1	10
209.45	2	1220	211.75	2	1313
Total		2,46,690	Total		2,98,506

The 20 depth window paints an entirely different picture. It not only tells me that I'll get the 5000 shares, but it also gives me information about the approximate buy price. If I were to place a market order for 5000 shares, I'd be buying this order book from 210.5 to 211.25. I also see at 211; there are 2425 shares available, so I can expect the average price is at or around 211.

Now, my decision to scalp the stock should depend on the pop I'd expect over and above 211. Maybe 211.5 or so. Of course, you'll get the exact breakeven (post charges) if you were to use a brokerage calculator.

Position sizing

Level 3 market window plays a critical role in 'guesstimating' the number of shares to trade, given the liquidity of the stock. For the sake of this discussion, we will assume that the availability of capital is not an issue.

Now, have a look at the regular market depth —

SIEMENS
		15	-0.48 %	1675.45
BID	ORDERS	QTY.	OFFER	ORDERS	QTY.
1675.45	4	61	1675.50	7	11
1674.65	1	4	1675.55	1	20
1674.40	1	64	1675.60	1	5
1674.00	2	153	1676.15	1	20
1673.75	1	63	1676.50	2	112
Total		1,01,460	Total		99,269
View 20 depth

You expect Siemens to move from 1675 to about 1690 over the next hour. So, given the fact that you are not constrained by capital, how many shares will you buy for this intraday trade?

The regular market depth window suggests that you can buy close to 175 shares. However, the 20 depth opens up a different perspective altogether —

SIEMENS
15 -0.48 % 1675.45
BID	ORDERS	QTY.	OFFER	ORDERS	QTY.
1675.45	5	67	1675.50	8	15
1674.65	1	4	1675.70	1	20
1674.40	1	59	1675.75	1	5
1674.35	2	99	1676.15	1	20
1674.25	1	49	1676.50	2	112
1674.20	2	67	1676.55	3	139
1674.00	2	153	1676.60	2	99
1673.95	2	144	1676.65	2	138
1673.90	2	152	1676.70	1	54
1673.85	3	198	1676.95	2	61
1673.75	1	63	1677.00	5	247
1673.65	1	34	1677.15	1	1
1673.55	1	212	1677.20	1	1
1673.25	2	68	1677.65	1	63
1673.10	3	108	1677.75	1	2
1673.05	3	230	1677.85	1	49
1673.00	1	100	1678.00	8	608
1672.80	1	1	1678.05	1	34
1672.55	2	253	1678.10	1	1
1672.45	1	60	1678.20	1	1
Total		1,01,570	Total		99,287

In fact, the liquidity in this stock lies below the best five bid and ask, and the impact cost is reasonable. The regular market depth window fails to capture this information. Assuming you intend to buy about 1500 shares, the buy price will lie somewhere within 1675.5 to 1678, which is spread of 0.149%.

In this case, assuming you are sure about the target price (1690), you can go all in and buy through whatever is available at that moment.

Order placement

You can extend the position sizing concept and use the 20 depth market watch to place a stop loss or a limit order. Assume you have an intraday buy position in VST Tillers at 1313.8.

VSTILLERS EVENT
-1.23 % 1313.80

The question is, where you would place the stop loss for this trade? Can the 20 market depth help us with this?

Of course. Have a look at the 20 depth window for VST Tillers. As you can see, there is a concentration of bids in 1290. The good part is that the number of order count is also the highest (35) in 1290.

This implies that several traders have placed an order at 1290, indicating some sort of price action at that level. This perhaps builds a case for placing the stop-loss.

A prudent trader would probably place a stoploss not at 1290, but maybe at a price just below it.

VSTILLERS		EVENT		-1.23 %		1313.80
BID	ORDERS	QTY.	OFFER	ORDERS	QTY.
1310.10	2	32	1313.80	1	7
1310.00	3	39	1317.75	1	42
1306.25	1	5	1321.00	1	10
1306.00	1	25	1325.00	2	92
1305.25	2	21	1328.00	1	30
1303.00	1	51	1329.00	1	1
1302.50	1	5	1330.20	1	30
1302.10	1	56	1336.00	1	2
1302.00	1	10	1336.80	1	2
1301.00	1	81	1337.00	2	26
1300.00	4	82	1337.75	1	50
1293.10	1	10	1338.80	1	5
1290.00	35	644	1340.00	4	136
1287.00	2	52	1345.00	1	2
1285.15	1	1	1348.00	2	3
1280.15	1	5	1348.80	1	5
1280.00	4	15	1349.00	1	10
1279.50	1	5	1349.85	1	5
1271.30	1	1	1349.95	1	1
1270.15	1	5	1350.00	2	85

So I was a buyer in this stock, then purely based on 20 depth I'd probably place my SL at 1290 or below, maybe at 1287 and by the same logic, set my target at 1340 or at 1338.8.

Validate the support and resistance level

I find this extremely interesting. In the example above, we identified 1290 as the stoploss price, simply because there was a concentration of bids. In other words, we expect 1290 as a support price.

If this is indeed true, then it should show up on the charts as well, right? Have a look at the chart below –

Clearly, there is some price action around 1296. Remember, support and resistance is not one price point, but rather a range. Therefore 1290 – 1300 marks as an intraday support for this stock.

This is a perfect example of seeing the price action concept play out in the market.

Another way to look at this is first to identify the S&R level and then check the 20 depth to figure if there is a concentration of bids/offers in that zone.

Hopefully, by now you've started to appreciate the immeasurable value 20 depth order book brings to you while trading.

Remember, irrespective of which technique you use to develop a point of view (technical or quantitative analysis), things boil down to price, and the action trades take at that price.

The 20 depth market window is essentially your ticket to validate the truth of this price action. Make sure you use your card wisely!

Do post your comments and tell us how differently you will use the 20 depth window for identifying trading opportunities.

Good luck!

Hi karthik,

First I watched the videos and then reading the modules. I m impressed by the way you have manufactured the course. I m learning these to enrich my knowledge not for trading but for knowing the nuances of share market as much as possible.

I m a retired banker and want to enrich myself in the manner that I should be able to teach others. I have given a challenge to myself. lets see.

Hi karthik, can you please start making videos (if not already) like your team has done for all the early chapters of the module.

I feel they are more comfortable and easy to understand learning mode of communication apart being just convenient and time efficient. It's my request if you can make them for all the remaining chapters and modules at earliest. It would be helpful if you can provide a rough expected timeframe for their upload.

And if those cards are not on the table for now, then just be honest about it, would also be great and not a problem, rather than saying 'soon' and leaving me in a hope. Thank you for your time and efforts. 😊😊

Dear Kartik,

It has been fascinating completing all your modules...I completed them a year ago..However when I saw the progress % today on app, it dropped to between 30-50% in various modules. I understand there have been some revisions, however am unable to distinguish the changes...so I have re read all of them which is not possible... So my request is if it possible..please highlight/mark the new changes everytime some upgradation is made... Hoping to hear from you on this...

Finally, completed the Module 1 after days of reading. Thanks a lot for the work you are doing.

Now i have only two doubts form the module 1) in the market window, bid price, offer price, quantity is clear. So Orders = number of traders available at that point of time willing to buy or sell their shares at that particular price. Am i right?

2) under order placement, you said

\”A prudent trader would probably place a stoploss not at 1290, but maybe at a price just below it.\”

Why it is so? .., pls explain

Thank you 🙏

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
March 3, 2026 at 10:06 am

1) yes

2) So if you place a SL at the exact price where there is high demand and supply, the the chance of that price getting triggered and bouncing back is high (only from my experience), hence I'd personally prefer placing it slight above or below.

Hi Karthik Rangappa,

I complete the module 1 today, thanks for your effort to make the clear content to undrestand the concepts easily.

i have some doubt in this reply. if i place SL at 1287 instead of 1290. 1290 has priority for sell right? then why 1287?

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
April 1, 2026 at 5:47 am

Sl is a single price point, so if you set at 1290, then your SL is at 1290, 1287 has no relevance.

Reply

-  Soumik Chattapadhyay says:
April 4, 2026 at 1:53 pm

When you place SL, you don't want to your SL to get hit. You set it because if the trade that you've taken isn't right then you can limit your losses.

At 1290 there are some concentration of orders so there could be a high chance that the stock can hit 1290 stay there and rather than fulfilling all those orders at 1290 could bounce higher which can you give you a greater chance of getting into profits or reducing your losses further.

Hence placing the SL below 1290 is advisable based on the above information. I hope I was able to communicate my point in a simple way.

Good morning, Sir. I watched your video on daily analysis where you mentioned that elections affect the market. I understand that central policies directly impact the economy, but how do state elections—like those in Maharashtra—affect the market? Is it because the BSE building is in Maharashtra? And how do elections in states like Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh affect the market? Shouldn't states like Haryana and Karnataka, which are more prominent in IT, have a bigger impact?

Also, I'm struggling to properly read charts and fully understand technical analysis from your module. Could you please suggest any good books besides your module that can help? I'm not sure what mistakes I'm making when applying price action and other techniques

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
August 4, 2025 at 9:21 am

As far as the markets are concerned, the state elections are only indicators of the local sentiment and what impact that might have on at the national level. Nothing besides that. BSE/NSE being in MH is not really connected with MH's election.

I'll just try placing an order 10% away and see what happens

Karthik, just out of curiosity how deep does the order book go? Is it possible to some day have access to 100 depth instead of the 20 we get today? Do institutions/market makers/HFT firms get to have the entire order book to unlimited depth?

Reply

o Karthik Rangappa says:

May 11, 2024 at 10:09 am

Good question, I dont really know how deep the order book can run. Will try and figure 😊

But for most traders, the top 5 bid-ask positions is good enough. Some traders prefer 20 depth order book, to see where liquidity lies. Beyond that I dont really know how it can benefit most traders, unless you are running an institutional book.

But as far as I know, even the institutions have 20 depth access.

Even if the 20 depth is displayed then also we can trade(buy shares) only on the last traded price ... So if I open a 20 depth parameter of a particular share which I want to buy, showing last traded (offer price) 1500 but somewhere down there in 20 depth parameter it's showing like 1400 rupees so how can I select that price and buy..

I don't even know what I am asking is a correct question or not? Plz help/clarify

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:
February 18, 2024 at 8:33 am

You cant select a particular price on 20 depth, Kunal. The 20 depth gives you a cue on how the prices are trending, basis which you need to place your trades. So consider the 20 depth only as a guide to the price at which you want to buy or sell.

Think about as different prices at which people wish to transact in (bid-offer), but a transaction will take place only if the bid and offer match, and that is a trade.

Hi karthik, is there any other blog post where you have discussed how the total figure at the bottom of the market depth is arrived at? For example considering the siemens example above, the total bid qty is 1,01,570 and total ask qty is 99,287. These values keep changing throughout the course of the day, and unlike total traded qty/volume- which can only increase throughout the day, and can even go down as the day progresses. So if the total bid qty is 1,01,570 at 10:00 am, it can come down to 99,800 or thereabouts at 10:05 am. So does this total represent the outstanding qty that has not yet been matched yet or something else? How is the total computed?

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:
February 3, 2024 at 7:35 am

Thats right. The bid and ask represents the total quantity that the traders intend to trade, but the trade happens only when the bid and ask match at a price, and thats traded quantity. The traded quantity can only increase over the course of the day. The bid-ask numbers keep changing based on the perception traders have on the stock.

Could you please also elaborate a bit on how are the multiple orders within a second clubbed by the exchange and displayed on broker terminal?

Let's say we have 10 orders going through in a second. 5 are hitting the bids and the other 5 hitting the offer. Does it display the bigger or heavier side of the trade. Like if the buy order was greater than the sell, then it would add the buy order quantity and display the avg. price of the buy trade.

Please let me know if my understanding is correct?

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:

Hi Karthik,

For most of the stocks i could see the spread is 5 paise. Is this something standard for the Indian market or is it decided by the broker platform?

Why I'm asking this is since I'm learning trading watching traders from outside india, I could see the level 2 prints having all decimal places like 60.41, 60.46, 101.3 etc.

Also, if you could please elaborate a bit on the difference between tick by tick data and a 1 second snapshot data?

Does zerodha provide the 1 second snapshot data? If yes, how are all the orders clubbed for 1 particular second.

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
October 1, 2023 at 8:34 am

In India, tick size is 5 paise, pretty standard across all contracts. Tick by tick data captures all the trades that happens in the market and 1 second is the snapshot of the trades that happen within that second. There could be multiple trades within that 1 second.

We can only see 5 market depth in zerodha for option contracts.. Why there in no 20 market depth in zerodha for option contracts..?

Could you please let us know when it will be available?

Or Could you suggest any other software for level 3 data???

Is there any other API to get level 3 information...?

Sir,

I am doing a job now and trying rigorously to learn your material in Zerodha since the past 5.5 months. I can afford to give 2 hrs daily on reading. Now, since I am already learning the basics of capital markets, all the 2 hours are getting devoted to learning now. Keeping in view of this, however, I have thought of studying the business newspaper but it is quite difficult to learn this since all the time is now getting to learning. Request your suggestion on ways how to keep me updated on daily news. Should I start reading any business newspaper or there is any weekly newspaper which I can learn at the weekend. I thought of LiveMint but I have no experience on time consumption to cover the newspaper daily. Please suggest ways out.

Hi Karthik,

By far the best content to understand markets!

I am going crazy with understanding the bids and asks! Please advise.

So there are over 250000 bid quantity at say Rs. 100. This means there are so many buyers here that the market will not go below 100. But this also means someone is selling those to buyers. Does it mean there is a support or resistance? Will market go up from this point or will there be a fall because of all the sellers selling at Rs. 100 to the buyers???

More Bids = support??

More asks = Resistance???

Its pretty weird but no trading terminal/software in India, provides a price ladder for >5 market depth, even though its a common feature outside India.

Or you could consider partnering with platforms like GoCharting/Sierra Charts/Bookmap and provide them your level 3 data that could be displayed in DOM price ladder.

The provided in the 20 depth, one of them is total bids vs total offer. Now, if I am watching this data @ 11:30 and my chart is 5 min candle then @ 11:35 total no of bid and offer that will be shown in the dropdown will be from since opening of market or between 11:30 to 11:35?

If we have total bids and offers since opening market how can we get it for 5 min candle? ie No of executed orders (option contracts) during those 5 min chart?

Reply

Feeling demotivated is a natural. Especially on days when you make a loss. But if markets are an area of interest to you, then the bounce back from the demotivated state is quick. If you are unable to bounce back quickly, then you need to reevaluate if markets are really for you. Do introspect if you got into markets out of some external pressure or compulsion. If the answer is yes, then maybe you should stay away till you feel naturally motivated again.

Good luck!

Hello Karthik,

Thanks for an insightful view on how to create Position Sizing through Market Depth. But just curious to understand, let's say in the Siemens example above, where we have the Totals in Blue (1,01,507) & Red (99287), does it in anyway imply that the short term view of price action is Bullish (& vice-versa) to make our POV more solid about it being bullish to take a long trade ? Please advise accordingly. Thanks in advance, and once again Kudos to you and your team for creating absolute Encyclopaedical Knowledge for everyone on Stock Markets.

Gaurav, the thing with bid-ask total is that it's very transient in nature. It changes so quickly that it is difficult to build a fresh thesis, but you can use it as a tool to support your thesis. For short term take, you need to check the prices (price is the key driver), and then associate them with the bid-ask tally.

A follow up comment:

What will be the nature of DOM when the price is moving sideways.

Karthik, what I am trying to understand is, how will the order book act, when the stock is (intraday) Bullish, Bearish and sideways.

It would make it very ease, if you could answer questions from both the comments.

Thank you,
J.

- o Karthik Rangappa says:

So the way to look at this is straightforward, look at the price, direction, and the order book in conjunction. If there is a lot of movement backed by volumes in the orderbook, then you can expect the directional move to continue, simply by virtue of a fat orderbook. But this is very transient, the very next second the dynamic of the order book may change. So the point is, any trade decision that you take based on level 2, make sure to cover that position quickly.

Reply

123. James says:
October 22, 2021 at 4:27 pm

Hi Karthik,

Can DOM, be also used to partially confirm the direction of a move?

Assumption: Stock A Might break an intraday resistance level, and may go long until held.

Questions:

1. What is the possible scenario happening in the DOM, will I see increased quantities of bid, or will I notice offers being filled very quickly? Or offers moving very intensely?
2. And If I had taken a long position, where can I anticipate myself being stopped out, in other words, what would be the nature of DOM, when the price may start reversing.
3. How can one use DOM to anticipate a reversal, when the price is trading at all times high.

Thank you,
J.

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
October 23, 2021 at 10:31 am

Its possible, but this is purely for scalp trades.

When a quick move happens, backed by heavy either bids or asks, then you can expect a lot of orders hitting the exchange, and the trend to continue. About stopping out, dont think DOM will be of much use.

Hi, this chapter is a bit confusing to me. Is there any blog/video where I can refer to the concepts explained here in detail?

Some things I did not understand:

For the intraday VSTTillers trade:

\"So I was a buyer in this stock, then purely based on 20 depth I'd probably place my SL at 1290 or below, maybe at 1287 and by the same logic, set my target at 1340 or at 1338.8.\"

Why would you place a SL at 1290 or lower?

Reply

o  Karthik Rangappa says:

June 10, 2021 at 10:56 am

Not sure if there are any videos on this topics. 1290 or lower has a maximum concentration of order, hence.

As every one told, it is amazing feature but, I believe for options trading especially for buyers this 20 depth is not sufficient because it covers range of +/- Rs.1 from LTP. Is it possible to provide range of +/- Rs.20 from LTP in separate window ? so we can guess big move in that option.

For example NIFTY 20th May is trading at Rs.21.75. If u provide depth for

1. Rs.20-21,
2. Rs. 21-22,
3. Rs 22-23 and so on for offer side.

What do you think, karthik ?

1. When the current of the scrip is at 1313, then why should some one place buy orders at 1290, 23 points away on an intraday basis.
2. Also the stop loss and profit target are too large... And it may not be possible to reach in intraday.... So the orders which are not executed will open for the next day also.

I would like to ask a doubt regarding a statement you told in the comments section : \”there is no way one can identify disclosed quantity. By the way, level 3 helps you identify contract availability. Given this, the disclosed quantity, if any, will only make the liquidity situation better.\”

What is meant by a disclosed quantity and how will it make the liquidity situation better?

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:
March 9, 2021 at 9:34 pm

Not really because disclosed quantity never gets exposed in any order book. It is like buying wanting to buy 5 chocolates at a shop, but you keep buying 1 chocolate at a time, the shop keeper will not know how many you really want but will keep selling you 1 chocolate every time you ask for it.

This 20 market depth data does help in identifying support & resistance in intraday trading... This can be used in conjunction with chart(minutes based) in the background on Kite....

Would be very useful if traded in high volumes.

Thank you team Zerodha for providing this facility for retail traders 🌞

Keep developing & incorporating new software technologies on your platform 👍

Okay, but I think we can guess based on bid/ask volume ratio.

Is the "total bid" in the above chart means the volume of shares that is sold to bidder, or is it only the bid offer that is not traded yet? Please clarify this one.

Thanks.

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:

These are the quantities available to trade at this moment, it can be traded. But remember the traders can cancel these trades before they execute.

Reply

187.  Manish Dahal says:
January 22, 2021 at 10:48 am

Is the "total" in Bid/Ask chart is Bid/Ask Volume? Bid/Ask Volume is the number of shares changing hands, Am I right?

if the Bid volume is double than Ask volume, price is likely to go down?

If the Ask volume is double than bid volume, price is likely to go up, is that Correct?

Thanks in advance.

In the market depth data what does the color(blue or red) on the numbers indicate. Like in the above example of Seimens, some data is shaded in blue or red depending on Bid or Offer data. Further some data is partially shaded and while others are not or completely shaded. Please clarify.

Blue is the price at which you buy and red is the price at which you sell. The shaded part indicates the quantity available.

I am writing about the message from Neeraj on November 9, 2019. The reply button does not work for some reason, hence posting a new message...

I totally agree with what Neeraj is requesting. Whole point behind 20 depth data is to identify high volume bids/offers and then use this info to either identify SR levels OR to identify the price spread of your market order. The rate at which the level 3 data refreshes makes it very difficult to process this. Instead visibility to top 5 or 7 levels with highest volume on bid/offer side would be really handy. Please check the technical feasibility of providing this.

Very happy to see you providing level 3 data already... but yeh dil mange more 😊

Hello Karthik sir

Firstmost, you have been active in replying all our queries, so a big THANK YOU. I would like to ask here that I have been into stockmarket from 2017. Till 2019 , I have been doing gamble around and lost many lacs. It was in this year I decided to learn complete ly in stock markets and then Invest. So even during gambling, I took around 1% knowledge. Now in last 2 months saw various vedios, webinars, learned multiple startegies and all but have not gone into basics of technical analysis, fundamental and all. I know how MACD works, what is MA, Bracket orders, MO and etc. as this are shown in every videos. But somewhere or the other in heart, I feel something is still missing and I may have taken giant step rather than micro step. . You may highlight on this. In this , I sold all loss making stocks which were 90% down in portfolio just to see them rise in next one month. I did this to release some funds but still feel like I should have waited. So please guide me what to do in all this current scenarios. In this market, you have so much to read and see, how do I start is the biggest question since I already know things that are advanced as said earlier. Can zerodha modules help me in this. Am I doing too much or too less is also a question here

Reply

- Karthik Rangappa says:

May 27, 2020 at 8:08 am

Pratik, this is exactly how one starts, so don't get worked up 😊

At a stage, you'll figure that you know things but everything is scrambled. You need to connect the dots and ensure there is an order in this madness. You will find this order only with more market experience and by going through multiple market cycles. Until then, reduce your capital exposure in the market and trade with sums which will help you validate all the learnings in the market.

Good luck and stay profitable 😊

Hello Karthik Sir,

I have just started reading from module 1. Just need to know how this chapter of supplementary note can be a part of introduction to stock markets. Because, a person like me who have just heard of options but dont know of it is reading this chapter will be confused. I think this chapter must be part of F&O section is what I feel. Do comment back.

Also, need a small guidance from your side. I am daily looking around various videos, attending various webinars and reading various books on trading and investing. I am a bit of confused somewhat and when I go in live market I feel like what to do now even after reading and watching so much. What should be the best approach to avoid this and be consistent in trading and investing. Any inputs from your side is valuable to me

Reply

- o  Karthik Rangappa says:
May 10, 2020 at 8:24 pm

Pratik, yes, what you say makes sense. I included this chapter here thinking that this is a feature on the trading terminal. Too late to move, but will add a disclaimer here.

I understand that it can get overwhelming. Set yourself small goals in the market and try to focus and achieve only that. For example, goal for day 1 can be to figure out how to place a market order, the goal for day 2 can be to figure limit order, day 3 may be to read how bid-ask changes. Do this for a month – small learning objectives on a daily basis and after a month, you yourself will feel that you've learnt quite a bit. If you have any queries, feel free to ask us.

Hi,
could 20depth data be used to identify the trend direction ? Bullish or bearish , can number or volume of bid/ask suggests direction of trend ?

Hi Karthik Sir,

I must say my foundation for trading started with varsity, i am glad i came to know about varsity which has the knowledge shared by a person like you with vast experience in trading & investing, how simpler can someone make the concepts of trading & investing understandable to others so that even a person like me could understand about it atleast to an extent, it was after reading the topics in varsity i was able to understand the terminologies used in trading & investing when i read a book or when others are talking about it, it really helped me to learn gradually and explore things which i really needed, 20 market depth is really useful tool for me when i combine it with VSA concept sir, hope you come up with an elaborate topic on VSA in trading thank you sir

Karthik, Nicely written in simple terms a very good refresher of jargons and Knowledge. Examples were relatable, 20 market depth level 3 analysis is slightly confusing for me. Considering I'm a retail investor its a good to know not a must know.

Thank you for the material. All the best

Hello Zerodha team, Nice article about bridging the 'informational assymetry' gap for retails traders! Thanks for making life easier for retail traders. Quick question: It seems like Level 3 data is mostly useful for intraday trading or short term trading. How is this useful for long term investors?

Reply

-  Karthik Rangappa says:

You are right, level 3 is mainly used for intraday trading/scalping. It is of no use to long term traders.

Tis an incredible tool not only for perfect scalping but a good intraday swing trade can be executed with a limited sl. I really appreciate the effort Zerodha has taken to take our broking industry to next level. However sometimes I feel a problem when level 3 gets stuck and if youre in the middle of trade that too in a large turns out PAINFUL. I shouldn\'t whine though.

Hi Zerodha Team,

1) 20 level data only beneficial when you can save as a historic order flow data for future use else no one can make decision basis on 20 level data or 5 level of data.

2) As you already having 20 level bid ask data, Can zerodha provide historical order flow levels,real time order flow via heatmap like Bookmap providing.

3) Can you please provide cumulative delta and AVWAP in kite?

At each price point, buy or sell, the background colour of the respective QTY, is of different length. As far as i can understand, the length of the background colour, neither indicates the number of orders for that QTY nor the buy or sell quantity itself. I am sure there is some logic to the variable length.

but it is not the bid, it is the offer i.e the seller is asking so when the LTP reaches here the price should fall right? bcoz selling is more and demand is less. So, how he continued on the long?

Thank you so much Mr Karthik for the gnan you are providing.

Is there anyway (since price action movements are very fast) to view all the different data like Technical/Fundamental/Quantitative analysis, Market Depth etc to build a strong case for a trade quickly? Is Zerodha or any other software telling all this information in a single click?

Also since POV is different before the market starts, but after the market is open, is there anyway to know the trend change?

Appreciate more information like articles/books/software on this would be greatly appreciated

Kite gives you both technical and fundamental data. For basic fundamental data, click on the stock widget that appears when you hover over the stock name in Kite's market watch. You cannot know the trend change before it happens.

Hi

Great article and very useful. However, kindly correct the last example shown for validation of range breakout. It shows offers and you have traded assuming it to be bids. If there were multiple offers at 11980 then logically breakout shouldn't have happened.

Please correct me if I am wrong.

I think the traders who had place sell order @ 11980 will keep the stop loss above 5 to 10 points i.e 11990 ,once the price starts moving above the level, they will panic to exit (buy) ,this will lead to breakout due to dual price action. we should place a buy order above 11990 with a stop below 11979.

Hi Karthik , firstly thx to u n Zerodha for getting this to us. Secondly the concern arnd the brkout eg. I believe the wordings hav confused many including me. 2250 being the highest in offer(bids to sell if i may so) shd be the supply zone and act as a resistance from price pt. So either we see it as a temp resistance or enter in a trade only if this price pt breaks on the upside. Correct if that is what u meant. Thanks

Karthik,

As always, an excellent write up.

A basic question from my side. For a Nifty 12000 CE trading at 111. Suppose a trader has placed 4 sell orders with 1200 qty at 135 and he is the only one who has placed sell Call orders at 135 level. The trouble is that he has disclosed 0 qty. In this case what would appear at 135 CE sell side level. Pls remember that hypothetically these are the only orders placed at 135 CE sell.

Hi Karthik,

You wrote 'The bid concentration is the highest at 11980', shouldn't it be Offer instead of Bid, maybe a typo. And since 11980 has highest offers, wouldn't it serve as supply zone rather than support.

Hi Karthik,

I had written the following suggestion yesterday, for which you had replied that I can choose to see only the Top 10. I am not sure whether you have understood my question. I meant Top 10 in terms of "Quantity".

Once Top 10 are identified they can be shown in the order of the price itself, as it is done today (Intermediate prices where the quantity is low will get discarded). The displayed items need not be rearranged in terms of Quantity.

This may slow down the refresh rate somewhat but I think it should not matter, as it gives valuable information.

This was my previous message:-

"Instead of showing all 20 price levels, Can you please display only those price levels which are in the top 10 in bids and offers side?. This will make it clear where are the supports and resistances. This is especially useful in the case of nifty and banknifty where 0.05 price level makes it almost useless, because we can see only at a distance of 1 rupee with these 20 levels."

((I could not reply to your message there and so I have created a new message here))

o Karthik Rangappa says:

November 10, 2019 at 9:40 am

Hi Karthik,

Appreciate this new feature- thanks; it's most certainly preferable to just seeing the top 5 bid and asks, but in my experience, I do find that the level 2 data can often prove to be something of an illusion especially in the function of establishing supports and resistance. Often you find a strong quantity of bids and ask at a certain level and prima facie you'd think those levels could be crucial but as you move closer to those levels, invariably the bids and asks just disappear from the table. I've read somewhere that this is often the smart money looking to trap the retailers like me and send the stock scurrying the other way cause there's nothing quite like having trapped positions in driving momentum the other way.

Reply

- o Karthik Rangappa says:
November 8, 2019 at 6:23 pm

Well, bids and asks change, that's the very nature of this beast. You need to evaluate how the order flow hits at these key price points. Need not necessarily be for that given moment.

Sir, how will the market depth data be relied upon? When clients or trading systems use the disclosed quantity feature, not the entire quantity is shown. In such a case, isn't there a chance that the wrong assumptions are made looking at just the market depth?

Reply

- Karthik Rangappa says:
November 7, 2019 at 11:57 am

Valid point, but there is no way one can identify disclosed quantity. By the way, level 3 helps you identify contract availability. Given this, the disclosed quantity, if any, will only make the liquidity situation better.
